

Boat registrations may now be renewed on-line

Oregon boaters can renew their boat registration online via the Oregon State Marine Board at <www.boatoregon.com>. The new service is called "RegLine."

"The system is simple, safe and secure," said Janess Eilers, Registration Program Manager for the Oregon State Marine Board, "more than 200 boaters have used it since it went online March 7."

Boaters can still renew their registration by mail or by visiting a registration agent or the Oregon State Marine Board office in Salem. "This is just one more option available to boaters," said Eilers. "It's a very friendly, efficient design, but it doesn't replace other options."

The service was created in partnership with Internet software developer Code-It. The partnership is a first-of-its-kind in state government, adhering to rigorous standards set by the Department of Administrative Services. The Marine Board had no up-front fees to develop the site. Code-It acts as a registration agent for on-line transactions, accepting the one-dollar transaction fee as payment for the product.

Temporary permit can be printed at home

When boaters renew their registration on line, they print out a coded 30-day temporary permit/receipt, which they carry on their boat until their validation decals arrive in the mail.

"If you realize Friday night that your registration's expired, you can use the registration renewal reminder card that was mailed to you, enter your pin number, pay your fee and print out your temporary permit in just a few minutes," said Eilers. "You're ready to go boating Saturday morning."

Response has been positive, but one of the main questions from users is security. Eilers assured boaters that the site uses industry-standard security so personal and payment information are fully encrypted during the transaction.

To use the online registration, boaters must have received a Registration Renewal Card, mailed in early March, which includes the information to log onto the system. To register a boat for the first time, the boater must still visit a registration agent to present the title and proof of ownership.

The Marine Board's website also features registration and titling forms that boaters can print, fill out and send through the mail.

"Another popular feature on the site is the Online Boating Guide," said Eilers. "You can get information on any of Oregon's boating access sites statewide. With RegLine and the Boating Guide, it's now a full-service web site."
