where I had come from. I climbed up out of the little basin so I could look south across the draw and immediately spotted some deer 500 yards out. They were does and fawns, I stood there for quite a while hoping that maybe a buck would be nosing around.

Suddenly, just 40 yards to my left, a deer left its bed with a thump and bounded off. I couldn't see the deer but made a short run toward where it had been bedded, knowing the animal was headed toward the draw, which was more open. I got up where I could see and, at first, there was nothing; then a deer appeared, running through the small trees and old standing snags. I brought my rifle to my shoulder, found the deer in my scope and immediately saw some nice horn sticking off its head. I flipped the safety off and brought the cross hairs of my scope down into the lungs and swung with the deer. At the sound of the shot the buck turned up hill and behind a snag. I thought that I had hit the buck and he was milling around before he dropped. I waited; I did not have another good shot at the buck and I knew he would either drop or clear from behind the snag. The only hope the buck had of getting away without giving me another shot would be to keep that snag between us. Well, the buck made the wrong choice and came trotting out, side-hilling the way he was headed originally; the cross-hairs settled in on the ribs again and, at the shot, the buck hit the ground, he thrashed for a few seconds and then was still.

My deer season was over, the buck was a very healthy 3X4 with heavy horns, but not very wide. This buck had the most fat of any buck I have ever taken and when cutting up the venison, the meat was almost marbled with fat. Good eating, to say the least.

The rest of the hunting party went 50 percent on bucks, with most having had an opportunity at a buck. This is a little poorer than in the past, but I believe it was due mainly to the increase in escape cover for the deer. The deer herd looks healthy and there seemed to be lots of fawns with the does, this is a good sign for the future.

Blacktail deer hunting, locally, has been slow for the most part. After the first rains hit, a few bucks started to show up and the ones being taken are nice animals, but where are all the forked horns? Most hunters report seeing far more elk than deer; it never used to be this way in the past.

Now get out there and enjoy the great outdoors.

In an article I read recently by Eric Chester, a nationally known expert on youth and their generations, comments that some of today's political ads should be prefaced with a "parental warning." Mr. Chester points out that though we teach our youth to be honest, civil, decent to other people, and tolerant of others, political campaigns are designed to ruin the credibility of candidates and parties. Mr. Chester calls this "hypocrisy" and I agree. We all remember when, as kids, we were told we could someday be the "President of the United States." Mr. Chester points out that it would be difficult if not impossible to convince children today that being the President is something they should dream about, given what they would have to endure to run for office. It's a different world for our youth to grow up in but it is still our responsibility to instill proper values in them by word and deed.
