and the general public lacks power in our existing system. And our role is to work to change those systems of inequality.”

In her view, says Koch, with the Portland Central America Solidarity Committee, the tea party is swinging politics too far to the right, and the Occupy Together movement plans to nudge them back to the left.

The Oregon Tea Party issued a statement Tuesday critical of the Occupy Portland group for not getting a permit, and of the Portland mayor for allowing the demonstration. It says Portland police broke up a tea party rally in April but are letting this one continue.

Barbara Byrd, secretary-treasurer of the Oregon AFL-

CIO, has been at the Portland protest and says the demonstrations won't last forever — but the energy they're generating just might, “The stuff in the street may go away, but the relationships people are building, what they're learning about the issues, the way they're learning to focus their anger — that'll stick. And we'll be building on that to try to get some practical solutions in place to this mess that we're in.”

Protesters aren't just angry with Wall Street, Byrd says, but with big business in Oregon as well.

In addition to the Portland event, Occupy Together protests are taking place in Ashland, Bend, Corvallis, Eugene, La Grande, Newport and Salem.

Fresh off a job where she helped rebuild Vernonia schools, Alissa Keny-Guyer was sworn in, October 4, as the newest member of the Oregon House of Representatives with a commitment to investing in education, public health, and a revitalized economy. Keny-Guyer replaces State Rep. Ben Cannon, who left the District 46 seat in Portland to take a job as education policy advisor for Governor John Kitzhaber.

“After spending two years managing a coalition of business, community, public sector and philanthropic leaders to rebuild one local school district devastated by floods, I'm ready to work with my colleagues in the legislature — and those we represent — to help all of Oregon rebuild from the global economic recession,” said Keny-Guyer (D-Portland).

A resident of her district for the past 17 years, Rep. Keny-Guyer has a career closing disparities and promoting opportunities for under-served communities. She launched the Outreach Program for the Portland Saturday Academy, increasing math and science skills of minority students. She is the former director of the Hanna Andersson Childrens Foundation, and is currently a member of the Northwest Health Foundation and the Portland Childrens Levy. Most recently Rep. Keny-Guyer was the program manager for Oregon Solutions, which coordinated the rebuilding of Vernonia's K-12 schools, stimulating sustainable economic development for the region.

“Representative Keny-Guyer comes with immense experience working with diverse groups advocating for those who often do not have a voice. Her ability to reach consensus and achieve results will serve her district and Oregon well,” said Co-Speaker Roblan (D-Coos Bay).

Keny-Guyer and her husband, Neal, have three children, ages 14-20.
