The Pope Speaks.

If Gentiles clip my wings,
Down from my height I fall,
But land on nets of black hemp strings,
Held up by the dupes that crawl.

The Holy one I am,
Too nice to tread the soil,
I'm delicate and love my dram;
I'm too high up to toil.

My Jesuits will show
That, whether near or far,
I have the power to scatter woe,
To ruin, to make war.

Spain, Italy and France,
Leave your old pope alone,
For you will never have the chance
To drive me from my throne.

God smiles and gives me hope
That I shall crush free thought,
Replacing it with magic dope
By which weak minds are caught.

No one has built a clock
Which strikes my closing hour
For I still have a goodly flock
To keep the cross in power.

My wings you dare not clip
Lest I fall on your necks
And hold you in the Papal grip
Which always rules or wrecks.

People Should Wake Up.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 4, 1913.

J. E. HOSMER, Silverton, Ore.
Dear Sir: In sending our subscriptions to the "Journal," we do it not because the paper will be of interest to us as a news medium (neither of us has any acquaintances or financial interests in Silverton) but because we believe in the cause you represent.

If you should expose all the wickedness, fraud and deception of the Catholic church, you would have to publish a daily paper the size of the modern Sunday issue of the metropolitan dailies.

The Pope and his political and ecclesiastical dupes are fast getting a hold on this country, and unless the patriotic people soon wake up, it will be too late. But thanks to such men as the publisher of the "Menace," "American Citizen" and the "Silverton Journal," there are signs of an awakening.

So put us down as on the firing line. Wish we had a gatling gun, but as we haven't will use the "32" we have.

Yours for "God and Home and Native Land."

A Difference in Letters.

Compare the two following letters and draw your conclusions. Notice the familiar way in which the one handles the editor's name, and the courteous language of the other. One is a Catholic friend and has not paid for his paper for one whole year; the other is a Guardian of Liberty:

Mr. JOHN HOSMER,
City.

Dear Sir:
After reading your paper of late, especially the last few issues, I am compelled to ask you to discontinue sending it to me, as it is certainly some joke and too comic to read.

Honestly, John I am surprised at the way your paper has turned out, and if I were you I would get wise. Pinch yourself and see if you are not asleep.

Respectfully

Mr. J. E. HOSMER,
Silverton, Oregon.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Your letter and booklet just received today. Will say in reply I am very much pleased with the booklet and enclosed find money order for 60 of the same, as Friday night this week is meeting night for the G. of L.'s. I will read your letter to the members and I am sure you will receive further aid from the Guardians of Liberty.

Yours to down Political Rome and the corrupt priests.

CHAS. WEBB

The Pope's Costly Finery.

The most costly wardrobe in the world is to be found at Rome and belongs to the Pope. Each day etiquette compels him to wear different garments, and as nearly all of them are ornamented with rich and rare gems, no millionaire could hope to purchase them, even if a value could be placed on them. The Pope's little skull caps are of the finest and most beautiful silk, while his slippers of embroidered velvet are gorgeous to look at, being works of art. His gloves, made of white wool, are still more costly, embroidered as they are with fine pearls in the shape of a cross. A special herd of sheep is kept, from which all the papal woolen garments are manufactured. The surplices are of the most valuable and beautiful lace, while one long cape, the capa magna, which is rarely worn, hangs straight from the shoulders, and literally gleams from top to bottom with gold and precious stones. The rings, too, which the Pope wears, are priceless, containing as they do many stones of matchless quality.—Ex.

And this humbugery is supposed to be godly. Bah! Such tommy rot and sham is disgusting to enlightened people. But it seems Catholic slaves are raised to think it the proper caper, and as long as the fools contribute to keep it up the grafters will be ready to take their money.—People's Press.

The Peter's Pence Collection

Every year the American cardinals and bishops issue touching appeals in behalf of the poor Holy Father at Rome. The prisoner at the Vatican, they tell us, needs money to take care of the hard-pressed church; he has to support the poor missionaries in the heathen lands; in one word, he has to spend money right and left for the salvation of souls and the greater honor of God. In obscure corners of Austria—and in more or less degree nearly everywhere—priests and monks tell the ignorant people how the Holy Father is kept imprisoned in a dark and narrow dungeon, where he gets nothing but water and bread. The deluded people readily believe such tales, and are only too willing to sacrifice their last mite for the vicar of Christ, who, however, lives in dulci júbilo. Every one knows how generously American Catholics are contributing to these collections that are annually sent to Rome. Each priest is now being taxed individually, and when he sends the amount received in his parish to the diocesan chancery, he is required to state the amount of his personal contribution. It is a foregone conclusion that such proceedings amounts practically to a moral compulsion, as the Roman priests are very pliable and submissive instruments; most of them would be ready to swear that the moon is square if they were asked to do so.—Protestant Magazine.

Priest is Killed By Gas.

Rev. Father Patrick Gidea, about 45 years old, assistant pastor at St. Killian's Roman Catholic church, West Eighty-seventh and South Green streets, was asphyxiated recently in the parish house adjoining the Holy Rosary church, 351 East 113th street. A leaky gas-pipe in a room in which the priest had lain down for a little sleep before starting to South Bend, Ind., was said to be responsible for his death.

Father Gidea had planned to leave for South Bend, Ind., to attend the annual retreat of the priests of the Chicago archdiocese.—News Item.

This "Annual Retreat" for Catholic priests has been exposed as a "Drink Cure" institute where priests are sent or go, to be cured of the liquor habit and have the "booze" taken out of their system. Perhaps the holy man was so overcome by wet spirits that he blew out the gas, thinking in his delirium that he was blowing out holy candles after mass.—People's Press.
