FROM WASHINGTON.

An Interesting Budget of News from the National Capital.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]
 WASHINGTON, D.C., April 25, 1890.

All things considered the office of President of the United States is rather bare of perquisites. Probably he has fewer such than any other great ruler in the world. Beyond a few articles in the vegetable way the nation provides him with very little in addition to his salary of $50,000 a year. He has even to pay out of his own pocket the wages of his cook and maid servants as well as the hire of his coachman and the price of the fodder for his horses. When he gives a state dinner, which is clearly an official and not a personal affair he has to pay for it. Not only does he not get anything cheaper than other people on account of being President, but he has actually to give more than ordinary folks for what he buys. It is true that the President does have some things allowed him. He has his dwelling rent free, which means that he is permitted to occupy a few rooms upstairs in an office building called the Executive Mansion. All household accoutrements, as well as supplies of linen and furniture of all sorts requisite, are placed at the president's disposal. When the things wear out Congress replaces them by an appropriation. Only a little while ago $5,000 was paid for a new china set for the President. There is also appropriated each year $8,000 for White House stationary, telegrams, library books and other contingent expenses. Last, but not least, a yacht is placed at the President's disposal by the Navy Department—the United States steamer Dispatch, which is always kept ready for his order and service. Mr. Cleveland would never make use of the Dispatch, but no other President has ever entertained any scruples on the subject. Mr. Arthur found the vessel especially available as a pleasure craft. But after all, perhaps, it would comparatively appear that the President is not so very badly off as to perquisites. Cabinet officers have more reason to complain. They have absolutely nothing outside of their salaries of $8,000 a year, save an equiptage piece, and that is only obtained by a very loose construction of the law which provides two horses and a carriage for each department. It has been customary through many administrations for the Secretaries to use these official equipages for their private purposes. Secretary of Agriculture Rusk, when he was appointed to his present position, for the purpose—as he expressed it—of "keeping the flies off the administration" provided himself, for the department, with one of the finest pair of horses in Washington and a brand new carriage of a fashion somewhat out of style, the coachman sitting low down instead of aloft. In this vehicle the ladies of his family make their social rounds. Secretary Noble also has a pair of stunning department horses and the swiftest kind of a victoria. Secretary Blaine's carriage is like Mr. Rusk's only not so new.

The Torrey bankrupt bill has been favorably reported to the House from the Judiciary committee. In the report the two systems of voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy are exhaustively considered, and the conclusion reached that they are twins. By the bill the act of bankruptcy consists of default in the payment of an open account for sixty days after payable for goods, wares, or merchandise sold or delivered. The bill goes into effect November 1, 1890, if passed as reported. It is a Western measure, and its author, Jay L. Torrey, Esq., of St. Louis, is now in Washington. He is a fine looking young man, with broad shoulders, a blonde mustache, and a love for hard work. The bill is the most methodical preparation, probably, that has ever been sent before Congress. It has been estimated that 90 per cent. of business men sometimes in their lives fail. The great necessity for a general law of settlement is obvious.

The special committee of the National Reform League appointed to inquire into the condition of the federal civil service and the operation of the reform law, has made its report. The committee estimates that more than one-third of the entire time of each Congressman is consumed in securing officers for their constituents. Taking the last Congress as an example the committee found that the number of bills and joint resolutions introduced was 17,078 out of which more than 11,000 were never reported from the committee to which they were referred; that about 1,400 were reported but never reached consideration while less than 3,500 were finally acted upon.

The committee of Republican Senators charged with the duty of framing a silver bill, have two propositions before them: First, to authorize unlimited coinage of silver bullion produced in the United States; second, to limit the amount of silver to be coined at $60,000,000 a year, to be purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury without regard to the place of production. An impression prevails that the proposition will be finally adopted and recommended as the basis upon which to frame the bill.

If the minority of the ways and means committee has no bill to report it should lose no further time in notifying the House of the fact. The people are anxious for the tariff debate to begin. They feel that the sooner it is commenced the sooner it will be done for.

Speaking of after-dinner speakers, what is the matter with Speaker Reed?

The Town Boomer.

The men who advertise are the men who are doing the most to boom their town. The Chicago Inter-Ocean says: "It is not an unfrequent occurrence for business men to either come to the Inter-Ocean exchange room or send for exchanges for the sole purpose of studying the life and enterprise of the various towns in their territory, which they judge by the advertising columns and appearance of the local press. In these days a city without advertisers is dead and will stay dead, and no matter what the resources are."

Literary Thieves.

Editors who steal from the editorial columns of other papers, presume upon the insignificance of their own publication to shield them from detection. If a thought be worthy reprinting in its entirety, it should be credited to the publication in which it first appeared. However, it is of but little use to call attention to this form of piracy, for an intellect willing to masquerade editorially in the literary garments of other minds is of too low an order to be benefitted by homilies upon the iniquity of theft.—West Shore.

A member of the firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co., declares that the statement that a member of that firm and President Miller, of the St. Paul railway, would exchange places, was wholly baseless. Vice-President Bond, of the railroad, also denied the story.
