FROM WASHINGTON.

An Interesting Budget of News from the National Capital.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 6, 1890.

Under the jurisdiction of the treasury department are two places that are visited by thousands of people each month, and these are, first, the place where the government's promissory notes are made, and the other where they are destroyed. It is a question as to which one possesses the greater attraction, but the truth is that those who go to the one place think they have not completed the rounds until they have seen the other. It is the old story of the love of gold. If people cannot have lots of money of their own they want to see other folks money, and there is always a certain sort of attraction about the vast sums of money that are kept in stock by the government in the large warehouse on the corner of the avenue and 15th street. The stream of visitors to the treasury is constant.
It begins in the morning in the morning when the doors are opened to the public, and it does not cease until they are closed again. There is a regular route over which the guides who are furnished at the office of the treasurer, take their charges—along the corridor and past the rooms where the ladies are counting money, both new and old, and then descend into the basements, where the mysterious-ness of the huge vault doors, portentous with their charges are to be seen, peering out vaguely from the half lights of the gas flames that dance and flutter at the approach of visitors. But the main point of interest is the macerator, which is the name for the great machine that grinds old money into shapeless, valueless pulp—the financial ogre, as it might be called, which emits daily a loud whirring and moaning as if the monster were gnashing his teeth for more food. The money that is put into this hungry thing to be destroyed is that sent back to the treasury for redemption by national banks, after it has done its best service, old money issued by the government that has become limp and ragged, and other forms of the buying power that has seen better days. In short this is the grave of the cash. It is a huge kettle, closed on top and on all sides and provided with a door, locked down with three large brass padlocks, one for each of the offices that have access to the machine. The money is put into the kettle every day under the eyes of a committee of three officers, one from the office of the secretary, one from the office of the treasurer and the other from the office of the controller of the currency. Each of these men has a key to one of the locks and it will fit no other, so that it is necessary for all three to be present when the macerator is opened. This prevents any possible fraud, which is not an unwise precaution, as the money that is put is quite good at the time. The kettle will hold a large sum of money, the day's meal for it being on an average of about three or four hundred thousand dollars.

No such tribute to the patriot dead in the cemeteries around the National Capitol has even been paid as the demonstration that took place Friday. No better proof of the regard for the soldiers who have responded to their last taps could be given than the spontaneous and eager attendance on the ceremonies that called to mind the services of those who laid down their lives for a united country. Perhaps the enthusiasm shown by the southern people over the memory of Lee, recalled by the Richmond unveiling, stimulated the friends of the blue to a greater demonstration. Perhaps it was expected that the orators of the day would express themselves strongly on the Richmond affair.

At any rate, greater numbers went to the cemeteries and listened to the exercises. The display of flowers was greater than ever before and they were choicer. Far from the observance of the day declining, it was celebrated with a fervor that has not known its equal. A quarter of a century has rolled by since the grand review of the victorious army in the city whose streets could be seen from the brow of the hill, and the spirit of the occasion was one desiring amity and unity among all who live under the stars and stripes.

First Assistant Postmaster Gen-
day morning, and practically has ended his work in the present office. When he returns, it will be to place his resignation in the hands of the President, to take effect July 1. His successor has not yet been named. The departure of Mr. Clarkson at the present time is for the purpose of making a tour of observation regarding the mail service of the west. The prime object is to improve the service on the Pacific Coast.

The American congress is a queer institution. No other body can effect such radical changes in its business complexion with such a slight change in members. At one time the members were friends of the laboring men. Next we find them all soldiers with thrilling records, and now they are all posing as farmers.

Believes in Local Papers.

"Put your money in the local papers," said Allen C. Mason, the leading real estate operator of Tacoma. He was talking to a well known broker. "I never spent a dollar on guides, hand-books, blotters or other illegitimate advertising dodges, but I have always been one of the heaviest advertisers in the local papers. If well managed they appreciate generous patronage and use every effort to give your advertisements the widest possible circulation. Give them every dollar you can raise." Mr.
Mason started in Tacoma not many years ago without capital and is to-day a millionaire. He knew enough about advertising to give the best kind of advice.—Seattle Press.

Richard, the son of Peter Johnson, of Port Discovery, was accidentally killed near Dungeness Sunday evening. He was out hunting with his brother Andrew, when the latter accidentally discharged his gun by falling down, the contents lodging in Richard's leg.
The injured boy bled to death. He was aged 18 years.

Twenty men in line slept on their arms in front of the United States land office, Seattle Sunday, waiting for the hour of 8 o'clock next morning, to file on land in Whatcom county which is to be thrown open to settlement at that hour. The tract which the settlers are after is township 37 north, range 5 east. There is some valuable land in the piece, and the first applicant in the filing gets the choice.

Gus Aldeamutt, arrested a few weeks ago, charged with stealing barbed wire from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Sprague, and bound over to the superior court in the sum of $250, has been acquitted, there not being sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction.

BRIEF PARAGRAPHS.

STATE AND GENERAL NEWS.

Telegraphic Brevities and News Notes

Gleaned from our Exchanges.

The city council of Blaine have laid out work for six miles of twelve-foot sidewalks, and three miles of streets to be graded.

Crooked and Ochoce rivers have gone down almost to low water mark. The snow is almost all out of the mountains, hence low water.

Governor Fisher of Illinois, has called a special session of the legislature for July 23, to authorize Chicago to issue $5,000,000 bonds in aid of the World's fair.

The Chinese pheasant is getting up into the edge of the mountains.
In a few years they will be scattered all through the Oregon Alps.

The real estate transfers in Marion county for the year up to last Saturday night, as shown by the records, were $2,408,905. And they are growing steadily.

Bart Carl, who has been disabled since last March from a paralytic stroke died at his home near Long Creek last Wednesday. Mr.
Carl was a pioneer of Grant county and was universally respected.

A branch of goosberries was picked at Centralia which was fourteen inches long and held over 100 ripe goosberries. They were clustered so thickly the wooden stem was concealed from sight.

On Saturday night Dempsey, Campbell, Gorman and the rest of the pugilistic company took a midnight meal at a Boise City restaurant. A large crowd gathered about looking in the windows as if there were wild beasts within.

"Cap" Wildrich has skipped from Tacoma leaving several mourning creditors behind. He conducted a saloon on Second street for some time, and was well known about town. He leaves a wife and family in destitute circumstances.

The inhabitants of Centralia have had their ears saluted a number of times lately by the sounds of explosion after explosion. The Hunt graders are blowing out the hundreds of gigantic stumps from the right of way of the new railroad.

An inmate of the Marion county poor house got into Salem the other day and filled himself up with bad whiskey and when going home in the evening fell down a bank and nearly killed himself.
He was picked up the next morning on a pile of rocks where he had lain all night.

The bulk of the wool shorn in Crook county this year has been shipped to The Dalles, where it will probably remain in the warehouses until the market opens up.
At present there seems to be little strife in the wool market, and it is feared that prices will be low when buyers begin purchasing.

A woman named Hurd, of Corvallis, was arrested in Albany Sunday by Chief of Police Hoffman for disorderly conduct. She was incarcerated in the city jail until her companion, a sweet-scented villain, put up his overcoat and watch as bail, and the two disreputable characters left the city.

William Scott, the McMinnville murderer said to a reporter of the Salem Statesman that his sentence might as well have been a life one as he did not expect to survive ten years confinement within the gloomy walls of the penitentiary.
He will begin some light work about the prison yard.
