The Weather-Crop Report sent out by the Oregon Weather Bureau is getting to be a state "chestnut." A good many papers regularly give it full space in their columns, but there is only an occasional item of interest contained in it, and the only good thing that can be said of them is, that they make convenient filling when other matter is short.

In publishing the public printing, just the same as in any business advertising, the first thing to be considered, is the character of the advertising medium. Its responsibility can be secured by bonds, but the work should be given to a paper that has a good bona fide circulation; that is read and relied upon by its readers; that can do the work in a creditable manner, and above all, one that is recognized as a newspaper by the newspaper fraternity.

There died in Washington a few days since the only man who could have prevented the assassination of President Lincoln. His name was J. F. Parker and it was his duty to stand by the door of the private box in which the Presidential party was seated and see that only those entitled to do so entered the box. Becoming interested in the play, he moved off some distance, and J. Wilkes Booth seized this opportunity to enter the box and execute his murderous purpose.—Ex.

A single page in an issue of the Century taken for advertising purposes costs $500, and in Harper's $400. A yearly advertisement in one column of the Chicago Tribune costs $26,554 for the lowest and $130,000 for the highest priced columns. These figures will doubtless be of interest to men who invest $2 or $3 and flatter themselves with the idea that they are extensive advertisers, and also to those who so frequently ask why country papers cannot be printed as cheap as city papers.—Ex.

The Oregonian has shown Tillamook great consideration all along, notwithstanding the fact that the Oregonian and the city of Portland have little to expect in benefits derived from the increasing prosperity of this place. The Oregonian works faithfully and impartially in the interest of every part of the state, regardless of the envious rivals of Portland. The Oregonian will always maintain a large weekly circulation here, however, when the Albany & Astoria railroad is completed, the people of this place will depend on Albany and Astoria for their daily papers, until Tillamook is able to support a daily of her own.

The Oregonian is not much given to praising men beyond merit after they are dead. It has the following to say of Gen. John C. Fremont who died July 13:

He was a picturesque figure, but he will not fill a large space in the history of the country. As an explorer, as a soldier, as an amateur statesman and as a financier, his performance fell lamentably short of his pretensions. His early years were full of sound and fury and his latter full of failure and disappointment, not wholly unmerited. Yet his name is indelibly connected with the birth of the republican party and the early struggles of the war for the preservation of the Union, and will go down to history gilded with a fame borrowed from the great events into whose midst accident threw him. He was a small man who lived in great times and happened to be magnified by them.

OUR RELATION TO PORTLAND.

While most all emigrants come by way of Portland to Tillamook, it is a fact that Tillamook is depending on San Francisco more and more every day for her mercantile business. On the completion of the rail-way from Albany to Astoria, most all the wholesale dealing and marketing of Tillamook, that is not done directly with San Francisco, will be done in Astoria or Albany, and most of the passenger travel will go the same way. San Francisco is gaining ground here, and Portland wholesale merchants will have to offer some inducements to the business men of this place, or the coasting trade between points in this county and Portland, will die out entirely.

LET HER GO GALAGHER.

Galagher, the man who was hung for murder in Vancouver last Friday, created a terrible scene on the scaffold by resisting the officers when they attempted to handcuff him. His actions were like those of a maniac, and in his struggles to free himself, he came near overpowering several officers. He murdered a man some time ago under peculiar circumstances, and though he claimed it was in self-defense, told several stories regarding the killing. Much circumstantial evidence was used in convicting him, and it was supposed that he would make a full and true confession at the last, but in answer to a question, he replied "None of your damned business," and went into eternity with these words on his lips.

AN OLD CHESTNUT.

The following old revamped "chestnut" has been going the rounds of the press in Oregon:

The following "notis" is posted on a fence in Tillamook county: "If any man's or woman's cows or oxens gits in these here oats, his or her tail will be cut off, as the case may be. I am a Christian man and pay my taxes, but d—n a man who lets his critters loose says I."

It must be a prevalent idea in the highly enlightened and cultured towns of the Willamette valley that Tillamook is a backwoods wilderness, inhabited only by uncivilized barbarians and antediluvian moss-backs. If those who are laboring under such hallucinations will take the trouble (and the pleasure) to pay this country a visit, they will find it inhabited with white people, well educated, enterprising, and about as well versed in the ways of the world as the average American citizen.

In fact, we think the business push, educational advantages, church and social institutions will compare very favorably with the state of affairs in some of the old sleepy, stagnant towns in the valley, where some of our contemporaries are published.

WHAT ONE CENT DID.

This transaction serves to illustrate how small is the actual amount of money needed to adjust balances: "The office boy owed one of the clerks three cents. The clerk owed the cashier two cents. The cashier owed the boy two cents. One day the boy, having a cent in his pocket, was disposed to diminish his outstanding indebtedness, and paid the clerk to whom he was indebted three cents, one cent on account. The clerk animated by so laudable an example, paid one cent to the cashier to whom he was indebted one cent. The cashier, who owed the boy two cents, paid him one. And now the boy, having again his cent in hand, paid another third of his debt to the clerk. The clerk with the said really 'current' cent squared with the cashier. The cashier instantly paid the boy in full. And now the lad, with the cent again in his hand, paid off the third and last installment of his debt of three cents. Thus were the parties square all round and their accounts adjusted."—New England Grocer.

EXCHANGE GOSSIP.

Side shows and street fakirs have been a common thing in Corvallis lately. Our citizens seem to take more interest in them than they do in the board of trade and other meetings of similar importance to the welfare of our city. At least they turn out better.—Corvallis Gazette.

Portland does not seem to be satisfied with the count made by the census enumerator. Heretofore the real estate boomers have been doing the counting of noses in that city. Now Uncle Sam proposes to count for them.—Lafayette Ledger.

Inquiry among orchardists in various portions show that the apple crop this year promises to be free from the codlin moth and other pests, and that Oregon's big red apples will be produced in their usual abundance and in prime condition.—Sheridan Courier.

The wide spread dissatisfaction as to the census enumeration in western cities indicates one or two things, either the census bureau is a very incompetent affair, or the western towns find the truth as to their size very distastful. Which horn of the dilemma will you take.—Rockford, Wash., Realm.

There are 1000, or, to be exact, 998 colleges in this country. This statement explains the fact that there are always 1,000,000 or more men here who can't get work. "Employment" is relatively scarce, and no man wants to shame his college training by applying for "work."—Oregonian.

For the first time in its history, the Astorian announces a railroad time-table advertisement in its columns, of a railroad running to Clatsop beach. It marks an event. The event would be more gratifying if the road had its actual as well as prospective terminus in Astoria, but that will come with other conveniences.

Idaho owes her existence as one of the states of the Union to the very fortunate circumstances that the republican party is in the majority—a circumstance over which both Idaho republicans and Idaho democrats alike rejoice. This is the first time in the history of the country when every democrat in an entire political division found occasion to rejoice and be exceedingly glad that his party was in the minority.—Boise City Statesman.

Portland wants the Press Association there this year. The association meets in August, and about fifty editors expect to be present. The best thing Portland business men can do is to give the boys a big string of good paying "ads." for six months or a year. That would hit the boys better than for the business men to spend $1500 or $2000 in stuffing them at the Portland hotel. Oregon editors are not after the grand; they are chasing the substantial only. Issue "ads." to the boys and let them provide their own frugal rations.—Silverton Appeal.

The circulation of a newspaper is important as deciding the value of its advertising columns, providing such circulation actually represents the demand for it. To print a certain number of papers a day is an easy matter. All that is required are press facilities, paper and ink. To distribute that number in response to a demand for it is however, an entirely different matter. So that when an advertiser is told that the paper soliciting his business prints a certain stated number of papers a day, he should seek for a confirmation of the claim in the receipts by the paper in question for the sale of them.—New Haven Register.

The Road to Wealth

Cannot be successfully traveled without good health. To reach wealth or any coveted position in life requires the full possession and operation of all the faculties kind nature has endowed us with. These conditions cannot exist unless the physical being is in perfect working order, and this is impossible when the liver and spleen are torpid, thus obstructing the secretions, causing indigestion and dyspepsia, with all of their accompanying horrors.

DR. HENLEY'S English Dandelion Tonic exerts a specific influence over the liver, excites it to healthy action, resolves its chronic engorgements, and promotes the secretions; cures indigestion and constipation, sharpens the appetite, tones up the entire system, and makes life worth living.
