OUR CRANKY GOVERNOR.

Penoyer's idea of etiquette in regard to how he shall receive President Harrison on his visit to Oregon is something unique. He thinks he is a bigger man than the President, and expect the distinguished visitor to pay him abject homage.

tion, while young men, without number, long for the day of greater prosperity when they can afford to own and drive a swift roadster. Thus the fast trotting horse has become the national passion. He is a peculiar American institution. Race courses for the exhibition of his powers, and private training tracks for his development have multiplied indefinitely. Splendid avenues have been constructed where it is lawful for his speed to be displayed, and the spectators outnumber the participants in the sport on all of the costly avenues leading out of our large cities. - Rural Spirit.

LUMBERING INTERESTS.

The wood pulp business is growing in this country, and although more attention is paid to the industry in Eastern States, considerable is being done in Michigan and Wisconsin. It furnishes the means of utilizing a great deal of timber that would not be of much account for lumber.

The band saw is a great economizer as compared with old-time methods of making lumber, but it does not furnish the only means of using thin log saws. There is the veneer saw, for instance, which cuts thin lumber to a nicety, making little kerf; there's the big thin circulars of a type used in a mill at Xenia, Ind., 88 inches diameter and of thin gauge; and there is the slower, but more economical methods of English sawing. The veneer-saw method allows the sawer all the chances for turning, etc., that the band does. It would not beat all surprising to see some other method of circular sawing yet prove an active competitor to the band in the way of economical manufacture. - Woodworker.

There are 413 species of trees to be found within the limits of the United States and Territories, sixteen of which, when perfectly seasoned, will sink in water, says an exchange. The heaviest of these is the black iron-wood (Condalia ferris), found only in Southern Florida, which is more than thirty per cent heavier than water. Of the other fifteen the best known is the lignum vitae (Guaiacum sanctum) and the mangrove (Rhizophora mangle). Texas and New Mexico, land full of queer, creeping crawling, walking and inanimate things, are the home of a species of oak (quercus grisea), which is about one and one-fourth times heavier than water, and which when green, will sink almost as quickly as a bar of iron. It grows only in mountain regions and has been found westward as far as Colorado Desert, where it grows at an elevation 10,000 feet. All the species heavier than water belong to tropical Florida, or in the arid West and Southwest. - Puget Sound Lumberman.

There is an exhibition in Astoria a piece of spruce timber, discovered while excavating for a sewer on West Eight Street. It is a part of the old Fort George stockade, built in 1810, and sound still, after being over eighty years underground. The piece will be presented to the Oregon Alpine club. - Wealth of the North West.

The work of driving piles for the new jetty at the mouth of Coos bay has fairly begun. They are driven by hydraulic apparatus. The pile is placed in position on the sand, and a pipe is run down beside it, through which the water is pumped with such force as to dislodge the sand under the pipe, and it really settles down into position. - West Shore.

An Eagle Attacks a Farmer.

Thomas Shelby, a farmer, living eight miles from Lexington, Ky., on the Richmond turnpike, had a desperate encounter with a wounded eagle recently.

He was out riding over his farm when he discovered a large bird perched on the topmost limb of a tree. At the first glance he thought the bird to be a dark buzzard, but as he drew nearer he concluded that it must be an eagle. He noticed that the bird kept cying his legs, which were near the tree. Shelby took advantage of this fact and rode up close to the tree on the opposite side from the eagle. He had his shotgun with him, loaded with small shot. When he reached a point about thirty yards from the tree he fired. The eagle came crashing down through the branches and Shelby ran to pick it up. The head of shot was too small to do more than disable the bird by breaking its wings.

As Shelby approached the bird of freedom turned and dashed at him with the ferocity of a tiger. By rapid dodging he managed to keep out of reach of the bird's claws for several moments. He finally picked up a fallen limb, and each time the bird dashed at him he avoided it and struck and rained effective blows upon the vicious bird of freedom. It was not, however, until he had smashed his head almost to jelly that the bird gave up the fight. Shelby escaped with a number of scratches and took the bird to Lexington, where it was placed on exhibition. It is of the species known as the gray eagle, and is the first one killed in this part of the country for many years. It weighed seventeen pounds and measured nearly seven feet from tip to tip. - Cincinnati Enquirer.

Modest Expectations.

I have a friend who is in distress for want of "something to do." Not financial, but mental distress. He has an income sufficient for his wants, but he deplores the inactivity that is forced upon him by his failure to secure a congenial and sufficiently remunerative business engagement. He has tried the profession of law, but no clients came to his office, and that did not help him in his effort to busy himself. Then he tried journalism, but after a few weeks at that gave it up because it was degrading to a rich man to work for $10 a week, which was no larger a salary as he could command at the outset.

"And think of it, too," said he in a plaintive tone in recounting his newspaper experience, "I have invested in my education and in travel perhaps considerably over $50,000, and upon all this investment in myself, I was only able to realize about 3 per cent, and had to work pretty nearly all night and day for that." What my friend desires is a situation that will pay him for the actual work he does, and also a fair rate of interest upon his investment in himself. My friend is modest. - New York Star.

New York Girls on Fifth Avenue.

Every pleasant afternoon the processions of school girls may be seen swinging along Fifth avenue from Fourteenth to Fifty-ninth street. They are pupils in the various private academies along that route, and their outing is in accordance with the latest accepted method of physical exercise. They are all robust and rosy checked girls, and they walk in a manner that invariably excites the admiration of that patriarch of pedestrians, Edward Payson Weston, when he happens to see them. Low heels and broad soles to the shoes, their hands on their hips, heads erect, mouths closed, nostrils dilated and eyes sparkling, they form pictures which go far toward contradicting the oft told tale that New York girls, even those at school, are affected with ennui of the worst type. There are usually a dozen of these high spirited girls in each party, and they are accompanied by one or more teachers who, although advanced in years, are usually fine, superb specimens of perfect American womanhood. - New York Times.

An Intelligent Equine.

The intelligence of the horse has just been demonstrated at Vesper, near Syracuse, N. Y., on the extensive farm of ex-Sheriff G. G. Burroughs. Among his herd of Hambletonian horses in a field was a brood mare and a suckling colt. A few days ago the mother partly pulled one of her shoes off. With a great deal of "horse sense" she jumped out of the pasture and went to E. E. Moon's blacksmith shop. The smithy started to drive the animal away, but finally discovered and reset the bent shoe. The mare then went contentedly back to the pasture, scaled the fence and was once more mingled with the herd. - Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

The Proverbial Lively Cricket.

Carpenters drilling a mortise into a heavy oak scantling at Cromwell, on the Connecticut river, a few days ago, displaced a solid knot and found two crickets in a little round cavity behind the knot. The crickets were alive, but not very lively, and were of a pale, waxy hue, with yellow spots on their backs. They died within a few moments after they had been exposed to the air. How did they get walked into the little hollow in the scantling? Unquestionably they crawled into a knot hole in a stick years ago when it was a part of a standing tree, and the wood grew about them. - Philadelphia Ledger.

And Then He Didn't.

A Spanish author says in a social story now running: "Then she looked up." "Then he made a movement as if to clasp her in his arms." "Then—then—he drew a cigarette from his pocket, scratched a match on his leg and proceeded to smoke." Spanish heroes are sensible. - Detroit Free Press.
