HAUNTED BY FIRE.

Flames Mysteriously Shoot from All Parts of an Ohio Dwelling.

The tallest fire story that we have come across for some time comes from The Springfield (O.) Western Fireman. From what has occurred the last two days in the boarding house of Mrs. Rachael McGowen, on the south side, the superstitious and the benighted might be inclined to think that the residence was haunted by fire. The house has five occupants, Mrs. McGowen, three boarders and a servant girl, an orphan, 18 years old. Six weeks ago Mr. Reeser, a boarder, after taking a bath in his room laid his towel across the arms of a willow rocker to dry. While absent the towel took fire, and when discovered the rocker and the carpet were also burning. Some time later the house took fire, and some household goods were destroyed. Since that time fires around the house have been so frequent as nearly to craze Mrs. McGowen.

In the last few days fires have followed each other thick and fast. A pile of ironed clothing on the sofa in the sitting room caught fire. The tablecloth caught fire and a large hole was burned in it, and instead of the blaze ascending it descended and charred the table legs. A box of clothing was found on fire in the hall. The servant girl, who was charged with causing all the fires, was at work in the dining-room, when suddenly fire was seen at the bottom of her skirt, and the next thing they knew the back of her jacket burst into flames. Sometimes fire breaks out in several places at the same instant. Nearly everything from the attic to the cellar has been on fire. Two or three cupboards have had to take their share of scorching, and clothing hanging behind a door was found to be on fire. Wednesday afternoon the house caught fire again upstairs. The fire was put out, and at night a fire was discovered in a downstairs room.

Thursday afternoon, in three hours' time, fire was discovered in six different places. The people are now taking turns at watching to get some clew to the mystery. The house and goods together have taken fire twenty-five times. It is believed the fires are the work of some spiteful enemy who has scattered a chemical compound over the house, causing spontaneous combustion. A detective has been hired by the underwriter who insured the house to ferret out the guilty party. The detective has been unable to locate the sprite that is kindling these fires, but he is living in hope—just like the fellows who are looking for Tascott.

Teaching Whist at $10 an Hour.

One women clamorers who once berated the other sex because it did not open doors of professional and industrial arts to them have found, by looking, that these doors have never been closed, also that their oratory had been useless. They are struck dumb because, having preached equality, they can say nothing and have no arguments to use against the male whist teacher who supplements his income as a bank teller by late afternoon and evening classes.

An attractive man who earns those thousand dollars a year for services rendered from 10 to 3 o'clock at a bank bestows one afternoon hour and two evening hours, with two tables at each class, in teaching whist at $10 an hour! He is engaged fifteen hours a week and his pupils get their money's worth of amusement.

Women who have mourned the wrongs done to their sex have no words fitted to the last usurpation. Of course there are women who teach whist according to Cavendish, and do it well. Even illogical minds learn from them how to be tolerable performers with cards, still it is the man who has led and leads in the prosperities of instructing in whist. —New York Cor. Chicago Herald.

A Useful Rhyme.

At Dover Dwells George Brown, Esquire,
Good Charles French and David Fryar.

The reader will observe in the above little rhyme there are twelve words—to correspond with the twelve months of the year—now in order to find any day the month comes in on proceed as follows: What day does the 1st of June come in on? June is the sixth month, and you must say: At Dover Dwells George Brown, Esquire; of course, stopping at Esquire, the sixth word, as Esquire commences with an E—go to the alphabet and count from A to E, which is five numbers—then as Jan 1, 1891, came in on Thursday (always count from Thursday), thus Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday—then as Monday is the fifth day from Thursday the month came in on that day. Take any month you choose, use the little rhyme and alphabet—be careful; count from the first day the year comes in on, and you can instantly tell the day any month comes in on for all time to come. —St. Louis Republic.

Weight of Ice on Trees.

A gentleman of Brookline has sent an account of a very interesting experiment to show the weight of the ice upon tree branches during the recent ice storm when the ice on the trees was at its maximum. This gentleman thus describes the result of his experiment: "A branch of the syringa which weighed one pound had five pounds of ice on it, and a branch of pine needles weighing one pound had twelve pounds of ice on it. I got these weights by taking the wood with the ice on it at first, and then taking the weight of wood after the ice had melted. This does not represent correctly the enormous strain or actual pressure exerted on the branches of trees by these ice storms, but will easily account for the sad breakage of trees so common the past few Authorities Who Differ About Skating.

That clever writer and amiable woman, Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, will have to admit that she has been skating on thin ice, so to speak. In undertaking to instruct her readers in the mysteries, graces, science and customs of dancing and skating, she collides with the world's champion, and it is not the latter who is overthrown. Mrs. Barr describes skating as par excellence, "the pursuit purely idle, gay and aristocratic," says "half the work of the skater is done by the foot that is off the ice," tells of "the Fen skaters of Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire who, with their long runners and a fair wind, do their mile in two minutes," etc., etc. The article has come under the eye of Joe Donoghue, who, having beaten all competitors and holding the world's skating record at all distances, must be conceded competent to join issue with any skater with the pen. From far off Holland he writes in response to Mrs. Barr.

Declining to discuss the "gayety" or "aristocracy" of skating, he says it has always impressed him as "anything but an idle pursuit." He gives the "foot off the ice" no credit except for being ready to use when its turn comes. "I always thought," he says, "that the work is done by the foot that is on the ice." With pardonable impatience the champion dismisses the romancing about the the Fen skaters' "mile in two minutes" by pronouncing it "nonsense," as "there never was a skater in England who ever skated a mile in less than three minutes." Joe concedes to Mrs. Barr the dancing floor, but puts his experience and quite extensive observation against her positions regarding skating and skaters in every important particular. If she has faith in her teachings there is only one thing for her to do—challenge Joe Donoghue in person or by champion, after the manner of Rebecca, to meet her on good ice in fair contest, the vanquished to crown the victor champion of the theory and practice of skating.—Utica Herald.

Singular Preservation.

A New York undertaker, who for the past few months has been engaged in disinterring the dead bodies of old Knickerbocker families from the vaults in St. Luke's churchyard, received a special order from an old New York family recently to remove the bodies of two children from a vault in the churchyard. The undertaker opened the coffins. The bodies were in old fashioned metallic coffins, made to conform to the lines of the body, with rounded and narrow ends and a bulging center. Glass plates covered the faces of the dead, and these plates were in turn protected from damage by metallic shields.

When the undertaker raised the metal shield and saw the faces of the dead he was astonished to find that though the bodies had been in the vault for forty years they were as perfectly preserved as if they had just been buried. The bodies are those of a boy and girl. According to inscriptions on the caskets the boy died on Nov. 24, 1856, at the age of 4 years, 6 months and 7 days, and the girl on Feb. 7, 1851, at the age of 10 years. The little boy looks as though he were asleep. His mouth is just open enough to show a set of pearly white teeth. The girl is just as well preserved. She also has beautiful blond hair falling down over her forehead almost to the eyes.—Boston Transcript.

The Orchid Craze.

Orchids are spreading all over the world in these days, and we may expect to hear of other instances where a species has taken root in alien climes, like R. coccinea in Brazil. I cannot cite a parallel at present. But Mr. Sander informs me that there is a growing demand for these plants in realms which have their own native orchids. Among customers who write to him directly are magnates of China and Siam, an Indian, and a Javanese rajah. Orders are received—not unimportant nor infrequent—from merchants at Calcutta, Singapore, Hong Kong, Rio de Janeiro, and smaller places of course. It is vastly droll to hear that some of these gentlemen import species at a great expense which an intelligent coolie could gather for them in any quantity within a few furlongs of their godown. But for the most part they demand foreigners.—Longman's Magazine.

The Figure Nine.

For one hundred and ten years to come, no man, woman or child will write the current date without using the figure 9; for nineteen years during that period two 9's must be written—in 1899, 1909, 1919, 1929, 1939, 1949, 1959, 1969, 1979, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998; and for one year—1999—three 9's will have to be set down. Of the people now living, it is safe to say that no one will ever write the date of his or her own time without using a 9. Besides minding their p's and q's, the next three generations must give particular heed to their 9's. Nine has never been regarded as a particularly lucky number, but beyond question the years in which it will hold so conspicuous a place will bring benefits of undreamed value to the world.—New York Tribune.

Oysters Thriving in California Waters.

Two years ago Max Ehring placed forty sacks of seedling Long Island sound oysters in the water near the head of the bay. Today the bed extends over a space of 1,200 acres, and the oysters are large enough and in sufficient quantity to furnish the city of San Diego. Compared with the celebrated Saddle Rocks they are one-quarter the size, and with the world renowned Blue Point they are almost identical in shape, size and flavor. The bed is spreading fast.—San Diego Sun.

Burglars' Tools Serve a Good Purpose.

A minor part of our new press came broken, and as the blacksmith here had no drill, through the kindness of Marshal Jackson we borrowed the tools captured from the burglars. It required only

Scarcity of Water in Europe.

One of the greatest inconveniences arising from the frost has been a scarcity of water. No rain worth mentioning has fallen since November, and the little water arising from a partial melting of snow on two or three occasions has not been able to penetrate the frost bound soil. Consequently, there has been nothing to flush springs or fill ponds, while in very many instances the pumps attached to wells are frozen up. How the autumn sown crops will emerge from their winter quarters under the snow remains to be seen, but it will be surprising if they come out unscathed. Tares and winter beans are likely to suffer more than wheat.

For farmers who keep much live stock the outlook is not cheering, as the chances of early feed are poor indeed. It is true that any promise of feed at this period of the year, after a mild season, is often delusive, but this year, when mild weather comes, a start will be made with bare pastures and a very poor prospect for turniptops and early rye or tares. So far as can be told at present, however, market gardeners have suffered more than farmers from the prolonged and severe frost, as great quantities of celery, broccoli and other vegetables have been injured or entirely spoiled, and there is no chance of putting in early peas or beans.—London Standard.

Excursion Boats in Winter.

The big fleet of white painted, side wheel summer excursion boats are in the midst of their long winter rest at the South Brooklyn basins. Viewed from the decks of the Thirty-ninth street ferryboat they form a picturesque spectacle as they lie side by side or in long lines among the tall masted black ocean sailing craft and steamships. They are in contrasting positions also with many small and graceful yachts, which are slumbering away the time until the spring breezes will stretch their sails and they will skip out to see old ocean again. Not all the iron steamships of the Coney Island line are among the idle white hulled sidewheelers. One of them at least took the perilous and venturesome voyage by ocean to Florida and, with a band of music on board to tempt the tourist to choose her ahead of her rival, is daily making the trip from Jacksonville to Palatka on the St. Johns river, in Florida. When with returning warm weather the land of flowers ceases to allure and Coney Island's charms return to bloom again, the long ocean trip in the pleasure boat must be taken again, but it is safe to say not many will bid for the task of reaching New York past stormy Hatteras by that trip.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Cold Weather Fiend.

There is a specimen fiend abroad, in winter weather especially, whom it were calumny to call human. The sole object for which this fiend prowls the earth is to steal up to you unawares and put an icy hand on some exposed part of your person with the inquiry, "Aren't my hands cold?" The shock is enough to kill you, but it is not the purpose of your tormentor to put you to death speedily. It is his purpose, rather, to reserve you for experimental practice. Winter weather lasts in this climate from four to five months, and he aims to get in his fine work from two to three times a day for that period.

Often the fiend is related to you by ties of consanguinity, and occasionally he is on terms of intimacy that admit of the dwelling beneath the same roof, but neither ties of blood nor bonds of friendship can palliate his offense. There should be a penalty fitted to the crime, and in pondering the matter over, after being victimized to the extent that I jibbed at every footfall, and am a regular symphony in goose flesh, I have decided that the only adequate punishment for such an offense against humanity and good breeding is a shotgun.—Chicago Herald.

No Use for Modern Innovations.

Editor John Jackson, of The Calais Advertiser, is one of the few types of the old fashioned editor who is his own printer, and strikes off his paper on a hand press with a pump handle, remaining in New England. His paper closed its fiftieth volume recently, and through all those years Brother Jackson has written editorials, set type, worked the pump handle and directed wrappers as faithfully as if the fate of the nation depended on it. Brother Jackson is to be pardoned for modestly congratulating himself on his stick-to-it-iveness. Long may he wave the composing stick and ink roller, and as he intimates that he has not won riches in this world, may he reap an exceeding reward in the next!—Bangor News.

Bancroft Was an Old Man.

One gets a realizing sense of the span of George Bancroft's life by taking into account the fact that when he was born Abraham Lincoln had not yet seen the light, the world had yet to wait twenty-two years for the birth of Ulysses S. Grant, nine years for Gladstone, thirteen for Tennyson and seven for Longfellow. George Washington had been dead less than a year, Andrew Jackson had nearly half a century yet to live, Jefferson twenty-six years, John Adams a like number, Napoleon twenty-one, Byron twelve and Wordsworth fifty.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

To Commemorate Audubon.

The grave of Audubon, the great ornithologist, who was buried in Trinity cemetery, New York, in 1851, is unmarked, but a committee has now been appointed by the New York Academy of Sciences to raise $10,000 for the erection of a suitable monument. A number of prominent men have contributed $100 apiece, and it is hoped that the full sum will be obtained and the monument placed over the grave by next October. —Harper's Weekly.

It is stated that Mr. F. Marion Crawford is so worn out by overwork that he

THE CRY OF MILLIONS!

OH, MY BACK!

STOP IT NOW,

SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Henley, with the OREGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.
