ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

HORTICULTURAL SUBJECTS CONSIDERED IN A PRACTICAL MANNER.

Facts in Asparagus Culture—Too Close Planting an Error with Most Cultivators—For Extra Fine Plants Sufficient Space Must Be Allowed.

There is probably more difference in the quality of asparagus that finds its way to the market than in any vegetable grown. The small inferior sort is largely due to two causes. It has been cut too soon, and the plants grow too closely together. In considering these faults the farmer should remember that asparagus requires usually at least three years from the seed before it is fit for the market, else its supply would fluctuate like common vegetables, whereas, as a rule, a fair price can nearly always be depended on except, perhaps, for a short time toward the last of the season, when all other vegetables become more plenty.

STOOL OF ASPARAGUS—ROOTS AND CROWNS.

The French gardeners are noted for asparagus culture, and ship vast quantities even to the London market, besides supplying their own liberally. What they do ship is always very large, and this is not obtained by "colossal" kinds, as some would have one suppose who have seeds or plants for sale, but by giving each plant much more room to grow in. Here, as in England, it is the more common practice to have beds planted as close as one foot apart in the rows, and not over eighteen inches between the rows; the consequence is that in a very short time the plants are crowding each other for room, and as in the case of every other crop, a much smaller growth is the consequence.

In France these are never planted at a less space than two feet apart each way, and for extra large specimens as much as from three to four feet is allowed. A good medium distance would be three feet in rows and eighteen inches between, which on large market plantations gives a chance to work a horse cultivator to clean from weeds. Many persons imagine at these great distances a serious loss is obtained, but this is not so, as when the shoots have abundance of room to spread in each plant produces a forest of stout roots that would surprise those who dug up one of the plants for examination.

Setting Plants Too Deep.

It is well known that it is an unsafe thing to set a young tree much deeper than it originally stood in the nursery. The same principle seems to apply to young vegetables, according to experiments conducted at the Ithaca station. Two hundred plants of Wakefield cabbage were set deep and shallow in alternate rows—the deep ones sunk up to the first leaves, the shallow ones at the same depth that they stood at in the seed bed. The deep set plants gave only seven or eight heads in a hundred; the shallow set produced eighty-five solid heads, and these weighed 12 per cent more than the deep ones. The ground planted was a heavy soil. Country Gentlemen suggests that there would probably be less difference in a light soil.

Requisites for Roses.

The most suitable soil for roses is a light, friable loam, abounding in decaying vegetation, such as thoroughly decomposed sods and leaf mold. With this mix, previous to planting, some bone dust and decayed manure. Avoid for roses a retentive soil without natural drainage. A liberal dressing of bone dust at the time of setting the plants assists these to a vigorous growth and prolific bloom. It will also be found beneficial to keep the soil around a rose bush well loosened. When the plants are blooming profusely, liquid preparations, such as soap-suds, manure in solution, root water, etc., are beneficial, if not applied too strong.

Horticultural Don'ts.

Farm Journal gives expression to the following don'ts:
Don't plant in wet soil.
Don't buy large trees.
Don't buy slender trees.
Don't plant lousy trees.
Don't plant a tree without good roots.
Don't let fat skin the trees with the swinge trees.
Don't use holes in the orchard without nose nets on.
Don't ripen the grain in the orchard.
Don't let a tree agent shut up your eye on wonderful varieties, and
Don't let anybody plant your trees; do it yourself.

The Peach Tree Borer.

Dr. Lintner, in remarks made before the Ulster County (N. Y.) Farmers' institute, said:

The best remedy is a solution made of soft soap and carbolic acid dissolved in water, with which wash the trees. One gallon of soft soap and one-half pint of crude carbolic acid, dissolved in two gallons of water, is the formula. The egg is usually deposited near the ground. A newspaper wrapped about the tree is also a preventive, but the wash is the more effective.

Peach-Cherry Hybrids.

The pollination of the cherry blossom with peach pollen was successfully performed at the Ohio State university, and several fruits reached maturity. Pollen of the plum was also applied to the cherry.
