FAREWELL.

Farewell, Life! my senses swim, And the world is growing dim; Thronging: I lows cloud the light, Like the advent of the night— Colder, colder, colder still, Upward steals a vapor chill; Strong the earthy odor grows— I smell the mold above the rose!

He Missed the Point. Almost his first effort in a newspaper office was to condense an account of a golden wedding. He did his best and handed it in. His editor looked it over and handed it back, remarking coldly: "You seem to have got everything in except the point. Try again."

Greatly abashed, he returned to his desk and toiled for nearly an hour over the thing, finally taking it falteringly a second time to his chief. That functionary read it through, and then with calm contempt looked the young man over. "Don't you see that striking thing about this incident, and the only thing which makes it worth our while to print it at all, is that each of these individuals now celebrating their golden wedding has been married once before. Probably an almost unprecedented thing. You have carefully left the main point out of both your condensations."

The newspaper man went on to say that he never forgot that experience. He thinks he owes his success to it, for he has come to be one of the foremost "condensers" on the press. Things come to him from all parts of the country to be "boiled down." "Since that maiden effort, which was such a total failure," he says, "I always look for the point the first thing."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

An Ex-Queen's Good Fortune.

The ex-queen of Naples, who has suffered all the pangs of genteel poverty during the past twenty years or more, has now been placed in a comparatively affluent position. Her mother, the late Duchess of Ludivica, of Bavaria, which died some weeks ago, left a fortune yielding an income of about $100,000 a year. According to the will of the duchess the property was to be shared equally between three of the daughters of the duchess, namely, the empress of Austria, the ex-queen of Naples and the Duchess of Alencon.

The empress, however, is so wealthy in her own right—she has an income of $200,000 a year of her own, besides the right of drawing upon her husband's practically inexhaustible purse—that she has abandoned her share of the bequest to the ex-queen of Naples, who will therefore now come in for about $60,000 to $70,000 a year. The ex-queen figures as the heroine in Daudet's "Kings in Exile."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Mushrooms Are Filling.

One virtue of the mushroom that oftentimes is not realized by its champions even is its nutritive qualities, for it is often considered fit only for a sauce or a side dish. Recently I ate dinner with a friend who is a bon vivant and gifted with an abnormally large appetite. To my surprise he ordered nothing but mushrooms, bread and butter, and, of course, drinkables. We had mushrooms raw, stewed, fried and broiled on toast. It was my first experience, but I found them excellent. I certainly thought they would not "stay by me," but to my surprise for many hours afterward I had as complete a sense of fullness as rare roast beef or juicy steak ever imparted.—New York Telegram.

The Thunder Stone.

The opal was looked upon as a thunder stone, and although many women are now given to a strong superstition prejudice against wearing one, it was in bygone days held in the highest estimation, for it was supposed to combine the virtues of several other gems.—Queries Magazine.

Giving Him the Grip.

Little Girl—Professor Greentind, that big doctor over the way, says 'e's tryin to give the grip to his dog. Wot's that for? Little Boy—I don't quite know, but that dog of his isn't good for anything. Maybe 'e's tryin to make him cross.—Good News.

A Delightful Effect.

Artist—Those evergreens on the north side of your house have a delightful effect. Farmer—I should say they had. Them trees keep off the wind and save about eight dollars' worth of firewood every winter.—New York Weekly.

J. M. Crandall, of Pilot Knob, Ind., is responsible for the statement that Alexander Ritchie, of that place, owns a lamb with one perfect head and neck and two perfect bodies, and two sets of limbs complete. The bodies join near the shoulders.

In 1782 a cow was tried for murder at Putnam, Conn, and five years later a pig, which had killed a child in the streets of Menan, was thrown into prison, tried and finally strangled in the market place.

How to Care for a Trotter.

When the horse comes in from his work rub him all over from his ears to his tail and down to his knees with wash as near the temperature of his body as possible. To make this wash take one part alcohol, two parts pure witch hazel and three or four times as much soft water as the combined quantity of alcohol and witch hazel. Every muscle should be rubbed thoroughly. Throw a medium weight blanket over the horse now, and let him stand until you have put the bandages on.

Use the same wash for the legs as for the body, but have it cold. After putting the wash on the legs, rub them well with the palm of the hand, always rubbing down, never up. Put the bandages on immediately after the rubbing. Rub all his heels perfectly dry with clean, dry rags. Care should be taken in this, as cracked heels are very stubborn and often lay a horse up for the season.

Throw the blanket back from the head and scrape off all wash that remains, most of it will have entered the pores of the body; cover up his shoulders and the rest of the body with a clean, dry rag and rub him all over lightly, always rubbing with the hair as much as possible; now put a light hood on him and an extra blanket over his loins, and after looking at his heels again walk him out for about five minutes, then bring him in, and should he have broken out any while walking scrape him again lightly, after which give him another light rubbing for say four or five minutes, when he should again be walked for about ten minutes, and again taken in and rubbed slightly, after which put on lighter blankets and continue to reduce the weight as the heat leaves the body.—Rider and Driver.

A Cure for Laziness.

A traveler in the course of a morning walk in Amsterdam came upon a group gathered around a well, into which a strongly built man had just been let down. A pipe, whose mouth was at the top of the well, had been opened, and a stream of water from it was flowing into the well and gradually filling it. The man below had quite enough to do, if he did not want to be drowned, to keep the water out by means of a pump which was at the bottom of the well.

The traveler, pitying the man, asked for an explanation of what seemed to be a cruel, heartless joke. "Sir," replied an old man standing near, "that fellow is, as you see, healthy and strong. I have myself offered him work twenty times, but he always allows laziness to get the better of him, and will make any excuse to beg his bread from door to door, though he might easily earn it if he chose."

"We are now trying to make him realize that he must work. If he uses the strength that is in his arms he will be saved; if he lets them hang idle he will be drowned. But look," continued the old Dutchman as he went to the edge of the well, "the fellow finds out that he has muscles already; in an hour we shall let him out with better resolutions for the future."

The traveler watched until the man was liberated from his watery prison, and felt sure that at least a temporary cure had been effected.—Youth's Companion.

One Man's Misere. The other day a politician of national prominence sat in "the amen corner," as it is called, of the Fifth Avenue hotel, where Republican big game go in batteries. Across the corridor sat a keen eyed, swarthy life insurance agent. Presently a newspaper man, who makes his headquarters at the up town hotel, entered and nodded familiarly to both politician and life insurance agent. They were both under obligations to him.

In the most natural way in the world, from talking to both at almost the same time, he introduced them. Soon afterward he strolled on. Now this particular life insurance agent had been watching for months for an opportunity of making the acquaintance of this particular politician. He was not slow to improve the opportunity, now that he had it, and he wrote a life policy of $25,000 as the result. The next day the journalist who so innocently introduced the hunter and his prey received by mail a check for $500. Now this shows the great money-making power of the life insurance agent when they can give such commissions.—John A. Cockerill in New York Recorder.

When Did the "Glass Age" Begin?

So far as research has been able to determine, glass was in use 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, and was even then not in its infancy by any manner of means. In the Slade collection at the British museum there is the head of a lion molded in glass, bearing the name of an Egyptian king of the eleventh dynasty. This is the oldest specimen of pure glass bearing anything like a date now known to exist. The invention now known as "bleezing," the mode of varnishing pottery with a thin film of glass, is believed to date back to the first Egyptian dynasty. Proof of this is found in the pottery beads, glass glazed, found in the tombs of the age above referred to.—St. Louis Republic.

The Objection to Sterilized Milk.

All methods of sterilization that are in use in this country have the disadvantage of giving to the milk the taste which is peculiar to boiled milk, and also of rendering it less easily absorbed by the body. In France and Germany a method has been adopted which accomplishes the purpose without injuring the taste of the milk.—Professor H. W. Conn in Popular Science Monthly.

Cause of Winter's Coldness.

The earth is nearer to the sun in winter than in summer, but the cause of the cold weather of the former season is the oblique inclination of the sun's rays. Did the sun shine as directly on the earth's surface in January as in June the winter would be the hotter season.—New York Journal.

Robert Toombs' Advice. A lawyer went to Robert Toombs and asked what he should charge a client in a case to which Mr. Toombs had just listened in the court house. "Well," said Toombs, "I should charge $1,000, but you ought to have $5,000 for you did a
