Local notices, 10c. per line; and 5c. after the first insertion. Only 5c. per line for first insertion for regular advertisers.

Lost, Found, For Rent, For Sale, Wanted, and Special notices, in classified "ad" columns, at the rate of one cent per word for first insertion and half rates thereafter.

Legal notices, Nonpareil, 10c. per line for first insertion and 5c. per line for each subsequent insertion.

All local notices will be "starred" or otherwise designated as advertisements.

No special position will be agreed upon for any advertisement, though we take special pains to display advertising matter effectively and give as favorable position as possible, frequently changing the "make-up" of the paper.

We make a special effort to change or re-build advertisements as often as our patrons desire, but make no contract to that effect.

No cuts will be used, except out-line cuts on metal bases.

We reserve the right to reject any advertisement, and payment is required monthly or quarterly on large contracts.

Correspondence on topics of general interest, invited.

TILLAMOOK, ORE., April 20, 1893.

The Vice-President has had a chance to do something. He opened a fair in Baltimore Monday night.

Senators Hill and Murphy are kept rather busy these days getting acquainted with the New Yorkers who are appointed to office.

The exceedingly wet weather we have experienced of late is not nearly so bad as the destructive cyclones that have been wiping out eastern towns at such a rate for the past few weeks.

A British scientist recently stated that if a man weighing 140 pounds were placed under a hydraulic press and squeezed flat, the result would be 105 pounds of water and thirty-five pounds of dry residue.

It is said of President Cleveland that he never read a speech in his life. In the act of writing it he half commits it to memory, and then, with one more reading, he knows every word and punctuation mark in it.

The North Yamhill bank went up the flume immediately after purchasing the newspaper in that place. We intimated such a result at the time the newspaper changed hands. If a man doesn't understand the newspaper business he is likely to fail in it even if he has two banks to back him.

The eulogy on Blaine in Boston, May 3, will be delivered by Senator Frye, of the Pine Tree state. Mr. Frye has excellent fitness for his task. His abilities as an orator are recognized, and he was well acquainted with the man to whose memory he will pay tribute. He succeeded Mr. Blaine in the senate when the latter was summoned as premier under President Garfield in 1881. He was re-elected in 1883, and again in 1888.

The Independence West Side has come to the conclusion that the Republican party should adopt measures to attract the Populists, with a view to assimilate the latter named party. The HEADLIGHT has maintained all the time, long before the last election, that the Republican party should show a more liberal spirit toward the people who now constitute the Populist party. Many more Republicans will go over to the Populists unless some heed is given to the terrible warning of the last election. The farming and industrial classes, generally men of moderate means and of more than average intelligence, are the backbone of the Republican party, and they must have the say in party management, to the exclusion of political bosses, or the Republican party never can be successful again. This respectable middle class fought the battles and stood the hardships of the civil war, and are of the kind of mettle that will not stand too much imposition. The Republican party was formed from this class, and in order to hold them, there must be a radical reform in political management. What is wanted are conventions by the people (not politicians) and candidates from the people. The Demagogues and trickster bosses must be buried beyond resurrection, and then there is hope for the party. Under such circumstances it is sure to triumph over all such corruption as has been displayed in Chicago and New York, and will stand even a better show in the shot gun districts of the South.

It begins to look as the people of Chicago had perfected every method of robbing people who visit the world's fair. It will cost from $5 to $10 per day to live there during the fair, at the lowest calculations, and there will be opportunities for a man to spend a great deal more. The railroad companies are not disposed to make a reasonable rate, so the people of Oregon had better take the advice of the Oregonian, viz: Stay at home and mind their own business.

You'd scarce expect one of my age in merchandising to engage and hope to get a paying trade without the local paper's aid. And yet I did that very thing; I opened up a store last spring—this month the sheriff took my stock and sold it from the auction block. Don't view me with a scorn—full eye, but simply say as I pass by, "There goes the fool who seemed to think he had no use for printers ink." There is a truth as broad as earth and business men should know its worth. 'Tis simply this; the public buys its goods from those who advertise.—Ex.

The county court of Yamhill county has given the county printing to the two most obscure and irresponsible papers in the county. One of them is run on the bread and water plan and is likely to peter out at any time, and the other exists only to boom a small town, having a subsidy for one year, after which it will probably fail. Of course it costs little or nothing to publish the county printing in such papers, but the trouble is, nobody ever sees it under such circumstances; and it is, therefore, high-priced at one cent per column. There were six other newspapers in the county, two of them at the county seat, that were not recognized, and we will venture to say that any one of them has four times the circulation of the cross-roads journals that are called the county official papers, and the two at the county seat have a large, bonafide circulation in all parts of the county. It takes a great deal of gall to ask for the county work for some of the "rooral gernal's."

If you want to know anything and know it for certain, just step into any of the loafing places in this town and ask the opinions of the bystanders and side loungers. They can tell you anything and explain everything from the theological enigma down to the financial standing of the business men of the town. And, they are sure of what they say. They know it beyond dispute, and tell it in a way that is perfectly convincing. They know who has been loosing heavily at poker lately, they inform their hearers who is likely to break up in business shortly, they criticize the actions of public officials in a very knowing way, they are sure that it was carelessness that beached the South Coast, they know just how to take her off the beach, they know just exactly how safe the Elmore is in a rough sea; in fact they know more about navigation, rail-roading, politics, religion, bar improvements or dairying than people who are engaged in such business. Yes, these loafers are a great help to the community and should be consulted before any project is undertaken. In fact, it is exceedingly pleasant to hear them discourse and promulgate their positive opinions.

SUCH NEWSPAPERS.

An English lord who visited this country speaks thusly of American newspapers: "There is a want of dignity and refinement in the tone of the ordinary newspaper, especially in the West, where the writer seems often deliberately to seek out flippant or vulgar phraseology with which to clothe his ideas. In Europe one looks forward with a sense of pleasure and of keen interest to the arrival of the morning newspaper, feeling that, as a rule, much matter for thought and interest will be presented to his mind; but in the States it is different. He rises from the perusal of the paper feeling that he has been dragged along a low level of crime and vulgarity. Of course there are exceptions to every rule, and doubtless a native would in most States know where to turn in order to obtain pleasure and information from his newspaper reading; but a stranger is not possessed of this information and suffers accordingly."

ONE KIND OF CHARITY.

The Capital Journal, of Salem, has a great deal of charity for the erring and says: "To this class belongs the man addicted to liquor. As a rule the drinking man is of a generous nature when he is sober and violent passions when he is drunk. His habit of drink inflames his passions and his passions lead him to deeds of violence. He becomes destructive, dangerous, abusive to his friends and family, and often staining his hands with crime and suffering the penalty of the law. The penitentiaries are full of such men, who when not intoxicated are kind fathers, loyal friends and perfect gentlemen. It is useless to say they are the very men who should let liquor alone. They are the men who will not let it alone. What will you do with them? Society so far pauses for a solution of the problem. The churches, lodges, reform parties, statesmen and philosophers and Keeley cures all struggle with the subject, but so far only with partial success.

No good can be done by publishing drinking men as such and naming him in the newspaper. It does not render society any service to see his name in print. It does for the man aimed at nothing but lower his manhood and humiliate him before his fellows. A more charitable course is apt to appeal to his sense of self-esteem and the feeling that he has friends may yet save him.

It should be the purpose of a newspaper to help lift up the fallen, in place of making their lot harder. No family is benefited by branding it with shame in public prints. There are fifty men in Salem who get drunk. What assistance can it render them or those dependent upon them, or connected with them by family ties, to publish their names? It can only do harm.

It is the uniform rule of good newspapers, even in larger cities to not pursue a policy that adds to the hardship of the already unhappy individual or his family. The Journal has excluded from its columns the names of all such as far as possible, and in the case of drinking men its uniform rule, without exception, has been to not print the name of a person who was intoxicated, be he high or low, rich or poor, official or tramp.
