RELIGIOUS CRANKS

MISGUIDED PHILANTHROPY OF THE METHODIST CHURCH.

They Fought Slavery in the South, but Defend it in the West.

The Methodist Foreign Missionary Society has decided to make a final appeal to the president against the immediate enforcement of the Geary law. The appeal as formulated says: "We earnestly beseech the president to use all means within his power to meet the just wishes of the Chinese government, and, if it be yet possible, to secure through diplomatic action such an agreement between the two countries as will secure peace and harmony."

The following was also issued for distribution: "In this time of peril to our missionary interests in China, and of dishonor to the fair name of our country, because of unrighteous and oppressive legislation we deem it of the utmost importance for the whole church to look to God for his divine guidance and help. We, therefore, recommend that Sunday, May 28, be observed as a day for special prayer throughout the country, that our government may be led to just and right action in this emergency, and that such solution of the pending question may be reached as shall save the missionary interests in China from disaster, and secure just treatment to the Chinese in this country."

A Happy Old Boy.

A correspondent of the New York Sun seems to be enjoying the ideal old age. It is such an age as all mankind will enjoy, say, by the end of the twentieth century. It is an old age without physical pain or weakness and with all the mental powers at their best and with the philosophy at command which tussling with the world always gives to the right minded person. The correspondent alludes to the pope and Gladstone, both beyond 80, both doing an amount of work never exceeded in their busiest years. He mentions also Verdi, 79 years old, of whose latest opera, "Falstaff," the London Saturday Review says: "It is hard to believe that the new opera is not the work of an impetuous young man in the heyday of life." As to old age's being a burden, the correspondent remarks:

I do not find it so. It is to me the happiest period of a life that has been rich in happiness. It has brought freedom from many cares, relief from vain ambition. The mind is broader than ever it was before, and just as lively and fertile as ever. The spirit seems to be quickening; the humors are generous; the brain and hands are active; the physique is lusty; the step is light; there is no heavy burden on this old back, which is as straight as a stick, and which has got rid of the burdens that it bore 40 years ago. The past has given me knowledge of life and of the world and of mankind, all of which I like better every year. I have had more experiences during three-quarters of a century than most other men who have lived so long, and now I am reaping the benefit of all of them. I like society, beauty, gaiety, looks, travel, song, wine, a baseball game and a yachting trip. Even the light fantastic toe is not stiffened, and the horse that carries me knows how to gallop. Comestibles taste as good as ever; flowers are as fragrant as of yore. Give me music, the opera and the play. The voice is less resonant than once it was; it is mellower. The goblets of hair on the head are thinner than they were, but not less satisfactory. Life is lovely; time goes beautifully; happiness increases with the years.

The Florida Phosphate Boom.

"The boom is burst. The bubble is pricked," writes Alfred Allen in The Cosmopolitan of the Florida phosphate craze. While it lasted it was a craze only equalled by the gold fever of California or the earlier orange grove excitement in Florida itself. But it is over now, and Mr. Allen is glad of it. Thousands of speculators and some hundreds of honest people have been ruined, the price of phosphate rock has dropped in the Liverpool market from $25 to $12 a ton, yet now the business will be conducted on a legitimate basis, and "those who invested to mine—not sell—will be sure of fair profits."

The height which the speculative fever reached may be judged from the fact that although the output from the Florida phosphate mines does not equal the demand, yet the price is going down steadily. "In this steady musketry rattle of falling prices has been heard the boom of failing companies." The discovery of phosphate rock was made in Marion county, Fla., in June, 1888. The beds undoubtedly underlie a large portion of central and southwestern Florida. This substance is worth more than gold in some respects, for it will restore productivity to exhausted soil. Crops take from the earth immense quantities of phosphoric acid. This the Florida rock replaces. One ton of the rock resupplies a meadow of 140 acres with the phosphoric acid the hay crop took off.

Fortunes were made and lost in phosphates, as in the gold regions. The Florida natives mostly call the rich rock "phosfat," and it has proved fast indeed to some of them. In Citrus county many were preparing for a grand exodus to a more fertile region when the mines were discovered. The phosphate rock is found in the poor pine lands. The Citrus county natives would have been glad to sell their farms for a dollar an acre. In a few weeks the mineral discovery made the price jump in some instances to $50 an acre. The natives sold their property, and had at one time more money than they ever expected to have all their lives. "Some killed themselves by drink," writes Mr. Allen. It is probable that most of them are as poor today as they were before they were suddenly made rich by "phosfat." One trick they soon learned was to salt the surface of their land with the rock hauled from the mines, but the experienced prospector quickly detected the little game. Farmers are much like other people.

William Olsen's Woes.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 18.—William Olsen, owner of the Louis Olsen, indicted for smuggling Chinese, has petitioned the United States district court to be discharged from custody on the ground that he has been sufficiently punished, his vessel having been condemned and confiscated by the government.

The Steamer Danube.

The Danube is in Portland again with several hundred Chinamen aboard, but is anchored out in the river, not being allowed to land. The health officers found a sick Chinaman aboard, and decided that he had small pox. The sick man died, and the boat is still in quarantine. It seems that the Danube is irrepressible in its attempts to land Chinamen.

The Geary Law.

This law requires the Chinese here to register, and it cost them nothing to do so. The law says they must be deported if they do not. The missionaries and others who are in China should not object to such regulation, and if they do, let the Chinese send them away. The Chinese government surely would not adopt a more strict exclusion act than ours.

We never know how many great men we have in this country till the offices come to be filled after each presidential election.

The rooster that lays eggs is on his round again. He was in Georgia when last heard from. He is probably hunting that Ohio cow which gives black milk. The oddest thing about these stories is that there are people who believe them.

The American civil war which inaugurated the period of this nation's greatest prosperity began 32 years ago the 13th of this April. The boys who fought in it are getting pretty gray now. They are beginning to drop out of the ranks pretty fast too. It can scarcely be said any longer that there are more soldiers now on the pension roll than there were soldiers in the United States army under the three months' call.

The New York legislature appointed a joint committee to examine carefully into the methods and rates of taxation in the state and recommend such changes as in its judgment would equalize the burdens of taxation and increase state revenues in the easiest way. The committee's report is worth noting. A change in the mortgage laws is recommended for one thing, so that mortgages shall be subject to a specific state tax of half of 1 per cent of their value. The members of the committee make no recommendation in regard to changing the law that requires mortgaged property to be taxed to its value. There is already an inheritance tax on personal property in New York. The committee advises that this inheritance tax be extended so as to include also real estate and be made progressive, causing larger estates, both personal and real, to pay more proportionately than small ones. On all real estate inheritances above the value of $50,000 a tax of 1 per cent is recommended. This progressive inheritance tax is already levied in England.

It costs a king $1,000 a week to visit Queen Victoria. That is the amount he pays her majesty's servants in fees. A person of moderate means could not afford to accept an invitation to visit a wealthy British family. Every one of the servants must be fed handsomely when the guest leaves, so that the hospitality costs more than the guest's board would do at a first class hotel. It is very odd that English people, proverbial for hospitality, will permit such an outrage to go on generation after generation and the fees to grow larger constantly. It is a poor way to give to a person an invitation that costs him heavily and do it under the guise of friendliness. If the hungry servants of servants must be fed, the best ought to do it out of his own pocket. It is neither graceful nor gracious to make the guest do it. The custom is a really puts a heavy tax on people for being one's friends. If there is anything that we ought in mercy to pray to be delivered from in this country, it is the outrageous practice of feeding persons who are supposed to be paid for their services by the man who employs them.

Governor Penney reiterates the declaration of two years ago, that he will not be a candidate for the United States senate. This, at a time when his presidential boom for '96 is taking a freshening, would properly come under the head of judicious advertising.

The recent visit of Miss Ackerman, with her traveling companion to the city recalls the familiar calculation that of every $5 raised for Christianizing the heathen only $1 reaches them, the other $4 being expended in raising and sending the $1.—Oregon City Courier.

It would be a big help to the sash and door manufacturers of this coast if a glass factory could be located near them. To buy imported glass and pay a heavy duty or ship from the east means a considerable addition to what the cost of sash would be filled with home made glass.

The wage workers of all classes in South Carolina have formed a league to combat the class legislation by the farmer's party, which is now in control of every branch of the state government. Between the two reform movements, the people of the Palmetto State may secure equal and exact justice.

It is given out as positive among the Oregon democrats that Lotan will remain as collector until the end of his term. Officials of the treasury department informed the Oregon democrats that the charges against Lotan had been fully investigated, and nothing against him was found which would result in removal.

Whenever big timbers are wanted in the east, Oregon or Washington lumbermen get the order. Recently an order was placed for the timbers for a new dredge boat at West Superior, Wisconsin, some of the sticks being 80 feet long. The improvements at Duluth for coal dock and dumps have taken a great many carloads of lumber from this coast and more will follow.

An enterprising swindler of Newark, N. J., has been advertising in western newspapers for a husband. He signed the advertisements with a woman's name, and on entering into correspondence with victims demands twenty dollars to pay his fare to wherever the latter reside. He is said to have been very successful. The matter has been laid before the post office officials for investigation.

In the oldest town in the county (Darwin, Clark county), once the capital of Illinois) lives the oldest man in the state, James McCormick, at the advanced age of 110 years. He was a soldier of the war of 1812; saw George Washington, LaFayette; and was with Gen. Harrison at the famous battle of Tippecanoe. He has in his possession a silver quarter presented to him by LaFayette when he visited the United States.

The Augusta, Ga., Herald believes in lynching. This is what it says: "Have it impressed most forcibly upon negroes that in every instance where a negro or white man rapes a white woman, he will be killed, most probably burned at the stake. Let them understand that there will be no exception to this. Post the fence, post the trees. Preach in the press, preach it from the pulpit. Cry it in the market place and at the public gathering—for it is so. Rapists will be lynched in the south despite all the laws that all the wisdom of all men can make and place upon the statute books."

"Pants are made for men, and not men for pants. Women are made for men and not for pants. When a man pants for a woman and a woman pants for a man they are a pair of pants. Mistakes are often made in such pants. Such mistakes lead to breaches of promise. Pants are like molasses; they are thinner in summer and thicker in winter. Men get on a tear in their pants, and it is all right, but when the pants get on a tear, it is all wrong. There has been much discussion as to whether 'pants' is singular or plural. Seems to me that when men wear pants they are plural; when they don't wear any they are singular."—School boy's essay.
