HORN CREEK BUGLE

The Bugle scoops its contemporary this week by announcing the arrival of the Duke de Varagua and the Infanta Eulalia, on a pleasure trip to Horn Creek. The Mt. Hebo Journal is not in it. Very few newspapers are able to chronicle such events.

THE BOWERS went to the county line to meet their royal highnesses, (the lord mayor of Horn Creek saying that if Mr. Veragua and Miss Fantata wanted to see him they could call at his private office, up-stairs over the meat market, during his office hours—from 10 A. M. to 3 P. M.) Dan rigged his chaise, hitched his boss tauruses to it and went forth to greet the distinguished representatives of Columbus and Espanola. When Dan caught sight of the Duke he addressed him thusly: "Don Christobel Colon de Toledo de la Corda yGianta, duke of Veragua, marquis of Jamaica and admiral and adelantado mayor of the Indies, we welcome you to Horn Creek. Take off your hat and make yourself at home." He then gave him $20 to pay his expenses while here and extended to him the freedom of the city, in a clam shell most ornately carved and polished.

Dan is gallant, so he turned to the Princess Eulalia and said: "O, Infanta, Infantum, Infantastic Eulalia, how-do-you-do?" She naively twisted her apron strings and told him that she was tolerably well excepting for a bad cold. The procession moved on to the town limits, where the populace had gathered en masse, whereupon the grand marshal proposed three-cheers-and-a-tiger. This was administered in a hearty manner, and the princess sweetly smiled and said "thank you" in four different languages. The Duke arose to make a speech, but was almost overcome. He said he was glad that Columbus, his glorious ancestor, discovered America when he did. He said that the old man was put in chains shortly after he discovered the country, and that he was sorry until his dying day that he did it, though it turned out all right.

Dan hitched his team and the distinguished crowd started for the office of the Lord Mayor. The Fanta leaned on Dan's arm and the Duke followed along carrying his valise. On being presented to the Lord Mayor they were again granted the freedom of the town, and Dan was appointed to show the Duke around. They had a big night of it and the Duke made himself solid with the boys. The Mayor took the Fanta out driving. Next night there was a ball given in their honor and all who were present enjoyed themselves very much. The elite and upper-tens were there and some of them walked on their hands and knees all the time in deference to the honored guests. The Duke was a favorite with the ladies and danced most every set. The Fanta was very charming in her ball dress and danced with all the young men of Horn Creek. At the banquet which followed, the Duke, in responding to a toast, remarked that it was the happiest moment of his life, after which he sat down amid cheers and a pile of salmon bones. Dan looked regal on the occasion and appeared at his very best. Walking up to the Duke after supper, he slapped him on the shoulder and offered him something to smoke. This made the Duke think of it, and he went after his valise and set 'em up to the boys in the way of a box of fine Spanish hand-made cigars. The editor of the Bugle had led the Fanta to supper, and the Lord Mayor got mad and went home.

The Duke is a fine looking man, resembling in contour of face and form the editor of the Bugle. He cut quite a dash among us upper-tens. He wore a black blouse, with brass buttons, and long boots. He has plenty of means, and was considered a good catch by some of the ladies until they learned he had a wife at home. The Fanta is a prepossessing young lady and had several proposals while here. One married man proposed to elope with her, but she remembered the dignity of her position. She wears bangs. The Duke plays a good game of poker and likes a horse race, though he prefers a bull fight. He raises bulls for the fighting pens as a means of earning a livelihood when he is at home.

The royal party and its retinue were escorted to the city limits by Dan, after they had been here four days regaling themselves on clams and climate, and they were soon lost to view.

LATER.—It was found out after the Fanta went away that she is married. The simple-looking fellow that was with her and appeared to be her lackey was her husband. The people here made a great mistake in not giving him proper attention, and it may lead to war. Dan tried to hire him to act as usher at the dance, thinking that a well trained foreigner would take well as a handy man. Mr. Infanta pleaded that he was too sick to act. No wonder!

DISAPPOINTED.

The following is the way Editor S. W. Knox, of the Malvern, O., Doings, bids adieu to a constituency which has failed to support his paper: "In bidding adieu to Malvern as the scene of our struggles in the field of journalism, our readers will pardon a brief outline of the causes which have compelled our departure. Our lack of judgement and failure to comprehend the essential littleness of the place—our expectations that we could dispel the hoary prejudice and burst the rust-eaten shackles of rural conventionalities, have recoiled with stupendous force upon our pocketbook. We have cried 'bread, bread,' where there was no bread. We have wasted our energies and dulled the edge of our wit in trying to make blood gush from a turnip.

"We have laughed where there was no mirth. We have wept where tears are unknown. We have danced and the daughters of music are dumb. We have stung you into madness. We have tickled you under the chin. We have nursed and coddled the lean and meagre truth. We have created and disbursed the large and lusty eye. The fruits of our efforts have been apples of Sodom and our belly is filled with wind. Were poverty a sin, this were a hamlet in hell; were selfishness a virtue, this were a palace in paradise. To our friends—to those who succored us in our hour of distress—our memory will be ever green, and may the gods of time and fortune be ever kind to them. To our enemies—to those who withheld their supporting arm and word of cheer—may they reap as they have sowed Farewell."

A man with the imagination and versatility of Mr. Knox is foolish for wasting his time in a small, one-horse place.

There is to be an interesting event soon in the family of President Cleveland. Mrs. Cleveland has gone to their private residence on the New Jersey coast.

John B. Brockenbrough, of Oregon City, was appointed special agent of the general land office, at $1,200 per year. He was endorsed for the place by Dan Murphy.

In the case of Thomas A. Holden, Secretary Hoke Smith held that all lands within the limits of the grant to the Oregon Central Railroad Company were reduced to $1.25 per acre for the forfeiture act of January 31, 1886, and this could not except lands falling within the conflicting limits of the Oregon Central and Northern Pacific roads.

Dr. Briggs was condemned for striking at the "very vitals of religion," meaning the Presbyterian creed, which these good brethren have somehow come to confound with religion itself. As Dr. Briggs only advocates the application of reason to the interpretation of the Scriptures, it follows that the good brethren do not consider their creed, or religion, or the Scriptures, apparently synonymous terms in their glossary, to be reasonable.—Oregonian.
