

FREE SILVER'S VICTORY.

It Carries the Contest in the New York Mercury Overwhelmingly.

It was regarded all over the United States as a very daring, even foolhardy, undertaking, when The Mercury announced on the morning of June 24 that it proposed to test the sense of the people of New York city and Brooklyn upon the question:

Shall the United States government open its mints to the free coinage of silver without waiting for agreement with Great Britain or any other European nation, and at a ratio of 16 to 1?

Such stalwart advocates of the rehabilitation of silver as the Atlanta Constitution in the south and the Cincinnati Enquirer in the west thought that the result of such a ballot must be disastrous to the cause of free silver.

But the editors of these journals and of other newspapers through the country did not know the people of New York and failed to appreciate their understanding of the evils that have been brought upon them through the demonization of silver.

No one can read the letters which have been published daily in The Mercury, under the heading, "What the Voters Say," without becoming deeply impressed with the way in which the workmen have grasped the situation and the intelligence which they have shown in advocating free silver coinage as the first thing to be accomplished for their relief.

The Mercury has not solicited a single vote upon this question.

The votes, which have been sent in by tens and fifties, and in some cases by hundreds, have been gathered together by men who were interested in the cause, subscribers to The Mercury, who saved each day's paper so as to secure the vote of a friend upon the ballot printed therein.

But by far the larger proportion of the votes have come in one at a time in an envelope, with a 2 cent stamp on the envelope, sometimes accompanied by a letter, but generally not.

So far as space would permit, we have published these letters from day to day, following the announcement of the vote, but when so many were received some had to be left out.

The Mercury believed that it voiced the demands of the people in advocating the free coinage of silver, but it did not know it until this ballot was taken.

The result is astonishing when it is remembered that no effort was made to induce people to vote. It is more astonishing that so few people voted in the negative.

Question.—Shall the United States government open its mints to the free coinage of silver without waiting for agreement with Great Britain or any other European nation and at a ratio of 16 to 1?

The result of the balloting was that 33,716 voted "Yes" and 1,966 voted "No."—New York Mercury.

Silver and Prosperity.

I can perceive nothing ahead that promises a return to substantial prosperity and a revival of all our industrial enterprises under the single standard. So long as the supply of real money is so limited, just so long will clear headed men hesitate to venture in new business enterprises. But the restoration of silver would afford almost immediate relief to those most needing it. It would revive and resuscitate our drooping and failing industries, give a tangible value to real property everywhere, produce a reaction from the blighting effects of contraction, create prosperous times, such as expansion of the currency always does, with this difference, that this would lead to the healthy and permanent prosperity afforded only by an ample supply of fundamental money, such as gold and silver jointly would provide.

It seems to me that as the greatest producer of silver in the world the country should lead off in this matter. While there can be no objections to an international monetary conference, can we afford to await the tardy action of the old world? While there is a very strong sentiment in Europe in favor of restoring silver, it is not likely that any definite results can be obtained by an international conference until this country renounces the white metal.—N. B. Thistlewood in New York Herald.

A Double Dealing Bimetallist.

The most notable thing in Mr. Horr's opening statement (in the Horr-Harvey debate) was the demonstration that he had entered the debate under false pretenses. After saying that he understood that the question in dispute between him and his opponent was as to the wisdom of restoring free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 by independent action, Mr. Horr asserted that he was not an opponent of bimetallism. By that assertion he implied and meant to imply that he is a bimetallist and not a gold monometallist. He wishes it to be understood that he would be in favor of the restoration of silver coinage under an international agreement.

But he then proceeded to show, unwittingly, of course, that he is not a bimetallist at all; that he is totally ignorant of the scientific principles of bimetallism, and that he is nothing more or less than an extreme gold monometallist, sailing under false colors.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Competition With India.

The greatest loss this country sustains by the suspension of silver coinage is the depreciation in the price of silver, which places it cheaply in the hands of British speculators for use in the development of India. A restoration of silver, which is sure to come, will bring immediate prosperity to the silver producing states, but wheat producing regions will find a competition in the markets of the world that will continue to compete long after the restoration of the white metal, and that competition has been built up by the infamy of our own congress and the negligence of our own people.—Chicago Express.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS
Edited by ALBERT SHAW.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS, as its name implies, gives in readable form the best that appears in the other great magazines all over the world, generally on the same date that they are published. With the recent extraordinary increase of worthy periodicals, these careful reviews, summaries, and quotations, giving the gist of periodical literature, are alone worth the subscription price.

Aside from these departments, the editorial and contributed features of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS are themselves equal in extent to a magazine. The Editor's "Progress of the World" is an invaluable chronicle of the happenings of the thirty days just past, with pictures on every page of the men and women who have made the history of the month.

The Literary World says: "We are deeply impressed from month to month with the value of the 'REVIEW OF REVIEWS,' which is a sort of Eiffel Tower of periodical literature. And yet it has a mind and voice of its own, and speaks out with decision and sense on all public topics of the hour. It is a singular combination of the monthly magazine and the daily newspaper. It is daily in its freshness; it is monthly in its method. It is the world under a field glass."
