CALLING FOR THE DOCTOR.

How a Retired Showman Stopped a Little Medical Advertising Game.

"Your story about calling for a doctor in the circus," said a retired showman, "reminds me of the way we broke up a nuisance in a good sized Pennsylvania town. I was on the road with a farce comedy company, and we put in two weeks at the town in question, there being a big military encampment there and a county fair to boot. We drew good houses all through the engagement and were booked for an early return. 'I don't think we had been there more than one night before the doctor nuisance began. There would come a hurried messenger from the box office to the stage manager with a request that he ask if Dr. Bolus, or whatever his name happened to be, was in the house, and if he was to send him to the box office at once. Of course, the stage manager couldn't very well refuse, and general attention was directed to the medical man, much to his satisfaction. We soon found out that the doctors who were so much in demand were in order to secure the consequent notoriety. Well, we stood it for a few nights, and then an idea occurred to me. I took a walk up the main street until I came to a certain sign hanging over a stairway. I went up to the office indicated and had a brief conversation with its inmate, ending it by handing him reserved seat tickets. 'That evening, immediately after the first act and before any messenger from the box office had a chance to arrive, I stepped out in front of the curtain and held up my hand. Then in my gravest tones I asked: 'Is Dr. Chizeuld in the house?' 'Immediately a very tall colored man, with a bushy white head and huge silver mounted spectacles, arose in the audience and said: 'Hush I is, sah.' 'The audience tittered, but I kept my gravity. 'You are wanted at the box office at once, doctor, in a case which requires your immediate professional attention.' As the aged dandy ducked to me and hobbled to the dark the audience broke into a wild roar. Perhaps you will understand the cause of their merriment when I add that the old man was a corn doctor and probably the best known eccentric character in town. Well, there were no more doctors called for from that stage during our engagement." —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Why He Stopped His Paper. 'I reckon I'll have to quit subserbin ter yer paper,' said the rural citizen. 'Just see how much I'm a-owin of, an I'll pay up an quit!' 'Would you mind stating your reasons for this course?' asked the trembling editor. 'Well,' replied the rural citizen, 'as I don't believe in strikin a man in the dark, I mont as well tell you. ' 'Well? ' 'I've been takin of yer paper for 'bout six months, hain't I? ' 'Just about. ' 'Well, I've been ter town twies in that time an sold er lighted in two cows, swapped horses an licked the town marshal, an of you ever give me airy column about it I never seen it; that's all!' —Atlanta Constitution.
