Another evidence of improved business conditions comes in the fact that the loan agencies have resumed liberal advances on farm property at an unusually low rate of interest.

Now that the lumber business has adequate protection once more, we may expect a revival of that important industry. Timber claims will soon be valuable once more.

1897 is evidently to be a year of great prosperity with the farmers, the crops at home being very heavy and those abroad reported light, with the result that the farmers in this country will get good prices and have an unusually good crop to dispose of.

When Cleveland was inaugurated the Democratic party promised tariff reform and in 18 months succeeded in producing the Wilson bill. But five months have elapsed since the inauguration of McKinley, and the Republican party has already redeemed its pledge and passed a good tariff law.

Billy Bryan is clearing over $1000 per week by his demagogue speeches. Playing the part of the professional agitator seems to be right in line with Billy's talents, and certainly pays him much better than any business he has ever followed heretofore.

No general law has ever gone into effect in this country from which so much is expected as there is from the Dingley Tariff law. And probably none has ever gone into effect that has had such cordial endorsement from the business men of the nation.

To the credit of President McKinley he it is recorded that in him the cause of civil service reform finds a fast and firm friend. The amendments to the rules just promulgated by him shows that he has sufficient vertebral stiffness to resist the importunities of the spoilsmen of his party, who have been constantly urging retrogression.

Gen. Weyler, amongst his numerous other defects seems to sadly lack a sense of humor. One day he gravely informed the world that the rebellion in Cuba is practically over and that with the exception of a few scattering bands of insurgents numbering not more than 200 all told the rebellion has been suppressed.

The scheme which President McKinley had formulated to have a Currency Reform Commission appointed, from prominent financiers of the country, failed to secure the endorsement of Congress mainly it is presumed because Congress was too busy with the Dingley Tariff Bill to attend to anything else.

Mr. Bryan's silk night-shirt is still a nightmare to the average editor of the country, who seems to see in it a lack of harmony with Mr. Bryan's various professions and methods. Mr. Bryan has quite changed in his habits since last fall. It will be remembered that he went about the country shortly after his nomination assiduously assisting the baggage-master in putting his trunk aboard the trains, appearing upon the platforms in his shirt sleeves, and during his speech-making tours in a $3 alpaca coat. All these things have changed, however, since Mr. Bryan has come to the front as a moneyed man, reclining in the lap of luxury and favoring a silk and ruffled night shirt.

An international bimetallic conference held in the United States and attended by representatives of Great Britain as well as other leading nations looked upon as probable if not indeed an assured fact. The latest advices from Europe indicate that President McKinley's commissioners have received assurances from the British Government that it will co-operate in a conference, and that the assurance by England and France renders it certain that other leading nations will generally follow, while the probability that it will be held in the United States adds very much to the interest in the announcement since it will thus give to the people of the United States the detailed information thus brought to the surface upon a subject in which they are deeply concerned.

The arrest of Mr. Huntsinger by a Minnesota sheriff last week seems, with the limited amount of information obtainable here concerning the affair, a useless affair. By the Sheriff's own account, Huntsinger acted in self defense in the fight which resulted in the death of Stoddard, and by the evidence of the papers themselves he was not indicted until about one year from the time in which the alleged crime was committed, though he continued to reside at the place where the encounter took place for six months afterward.

The croakers who complained of Secretary Seward's course because he paid seven million for Alaska showed about as little wisdom as the croakers of today who have been insisting that nothing but the free and unlimited coinage of silver would bring back prosperity to the United States. Alaska has already brought to the United States many dollars more than it cost us, in its fur-seal industry, and it has developed some of the richest gold mines in the world.

The free traders are seeking to evade the fact that the reduction of the tariff duties by the Wilson law caused the reduction in coal miners' wages, by asserting that there was no increase in the importations of coal under the Wilson law and hence it could not have reduced prices. They assume apparently that the public does not understand that the reduction in tariff enabled the low-priced Nova Scotia coal to come into competition with that dug by the miners of the United States and by reason of its low prices drove the West Virginia coal out of the eastern markets.

Held Down by a Dentist.

One day lately a young man went to a dentist's office in Kansas City to have a bridge, with some teeth hanging to it, attached to his upper jaw. He rode to the building on a bicycle, which he left in the hall, and ascended to the fifth floor in the elevator.

The dentist's chair faced a window, which looked out upon Grand avenue. The dentist had filled his mouth with cement and was pressing it up into the gum with his finger. The victim was gazing out upon the street with a martyr's expression on his face.

Suddenly the victim struggled to get his head away from the grasp of the dentist.

"Ugh, ug glog, glog-ug-lug-mug-gug," he shouted in a muffled voice.

The dentist thought the man in the chair was having a fit, and fearing that he might swallow the cement, to say nothing of several porcelain teeth backed with gold, and several hours' hard labor, he kept his finger in the victim's mouth, and a silent struggle took place.

"Dad blame you," shouted the angry victim. "Why in Sam Hill did you hold me down that way for? Didn't I tell you I wanted to get up?"

"I thought you were having a fit," answered the dentist, apologetically. "Fit nothing," said the victim. "I saw a thief going up the street with my bicycle. I know it by the color and the way the tool bag hung behind and the ribbons on the handlebar. Being up five stories is handicap enough without having a brigand like you holding me down with his fist in my throat."—Kansas City Star.
