Tillamook Academy.

The arrangements for the re-opening of the Tillamook Academy have finally been completed and sometime during the present month, the school will be opened with a full corps of teachers.

Following is a letter from the sisters of St. Cecilia's Academy to Father Schell, and a letter from Father Schell fully describing the work and mission of the Sisters and the scope and work of the proposed school.

St. Cecilia's Academy.
Scranton, Aug. 19, 1897.
Rev. and Dear Father:
Your letter has just reached me, and although I appreciate fully the trials and difficulties that await our undertaking, yet we younger members of the Institute must be willing to follow in the steps of our founders, and we are most willing to do all we can to further the glory of God and to honor the immediate heart of his loving mother.

I will bring with me six sisters, four teachers, a music teacher, and a domestic. These are all, I can assure you, generous souls, whom I have selected from among the volunteers, for their many qualities of mind and soul. The teachers we through ones, and the music teacher will be able to teach any grade of music you desire.

I have now on hand a matter which cannot be settled before the last week of August or the first week of September. If it can be settled in August we will leave Scranton September 13, but if it cannot be settled until Sept. 29, we will not be able to leave before Sept. 29. You can make your announcement for the opening of schools for about Sept. 27 or Oct. first, but I shall write again one week before we leave here.

that they will become ladies and gentlemen in the fullest sense and meaning of the word.

Any man of this place that has been in the war, no matter what religion he believes in, is able to tell you about the Sisters, and no matter how hostile he is to their religion, after having seen their works there in the midst of flying bullets, carrying off the wounded and reminding them of their father and mother and of their home. Such men were never heard to allow any one to defame the sisters in their presence.

The number of teachers here will be: 4 select school teachers and one select music teacher. Their school here is a school of learning and of education and no school of religion, as religion is not even mentioned in the school, in this all the pupils are alike. All the higher branches are taught, and all the higher branches, and in such a manner that hereafter, nobody will be compelled to go to Portland or to some eastern city to become a gentleman or lady of high education and refinement. This is a privilege that every town in the U. S. does not possess, and Tillamook as well as every other town where the Sisters are found, will appreciate it.

They are found, will appreciate it. The parents, especially, know that their children in the hands of the Sisters are cared for, that they watch over them and protect them, that they are treated kindly and justly without partiality to any, that nothing wrong will be taught them, that the will hear and see nothing bad, that they are fully watched and protected from any outside influence against their education and learning. And lastly the parents know that their children will be taught to honor them and to respect everyone, that they receive all the social virtues which adorn the life of a true gentleman or a true lady. Learning is found, almost in all the schools to a certain extent but true education is seldom found, and a man with learning and no education is a man who has many treasures, but does not know how to use them, nor what they are good for.

A man of high learning may be wrongly educated, when he uses all he knows to do all the harm he can in his social life, or he may be rightly educated when he uses all his knowledge to do what is just and right in his social life. A right and true education with true learning (not imaginary science) for the children will meet the expectation of the parents. These two essential and necessary points are acquired in the Tillamook Academy under the management of the sisters, whose only honor will be the brilliant success of their pupils.

Joseph Schell.

LITERARY NOTES

Julien Gordon (Mrs. Van Ransselaer C. Gordon) has used for her last novel a study of New York, Newport and Boston life, which promises to be read with interest by all who are interested in American fashionable life. No one knows the society of these three centers of fashion better than Mrs. Gordon. From early girlhood up she has had every opportunity to observe, and we have had no American woman of more brilliant powers, nor of only reading the human heart but of putting her expressions in delightful fashion.

A charmingly fresh Massachusetts girl is married in her youth to the ambition of a "rich marriage." Deprived of love, she throws herself in the race for social leadership, and we follow for twenty years, with ever-increasing interest, the career of this able and beautiful woman as she captures outpost after outpost, first in Boston only to change her base of operations in England, and then attacking the main works of the enemy at New York, and soon to New York, and finally beholds the capitulation of Boston itself. The first chapters open in the September Cosmopolitan.
