

Woman's Deed.

A BENEFACTRESS WHO IS DOING INCALCULABLE GOOD.

Devotes Much of Her Time to the Benefits of Children—How She Helps Them.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. John Tansy, of 130 Baker Street, Detroit, Michigan, is one of those women who always know just what to do in all trouble and sickness. One that is a mother to her distress. To a reporter she said: "I am the mother of ten children and have raised eight of them. Several years ago we had a serious time with my daughter, which began when she was about sixteen years old. She did not have any serious illness but seemed to gradually waste away. Having never had any consumption in our families, as we come of good old Irish and Scotch descent, we did not think it was that disease. Neither did she have a hacking cough, yet she grew thinner and paler each day. Our doctor called the disease by an old name which, as I afterward learned, meant lack of blood.

restore shattered nerves. Before she had taken half a box, there was a decided change, and after three months' treatment you would not have recognized her, as her health was so greatly improved. She gained in flesh rapidly and soon was in perfect health. I have always kept the pills in the house since and have recommended them to every one I could. I have told many mothers about them and they have made some wonderful cures. One of the girls had a young lady friend that came to the house almost every day, and she was a sight. Honestly, she seemed almost transparent. I did not care to have my daughters associate with her, as I was afraid she would drop dead some day when they were out on the street. I recommended and begged her to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and told her of their sterling qualities and how the cost was slight, being only 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, at any druggist's. Finally I induced her to try them.

A GOOD PLEA.

There came one day to an inn near Bologna, kept by a widow, Madonna Lucretia, three travelers. Seating themselves on a bench under her vine trellis, they were supplied with a flagon of Aleatico by a lovely girl, her only child, the image of her former self. In their hats they wore a medal, such as in that age was often distributed in war, and they were evidently gallanters in one of those free hands which were always ready to serve in any quarter, if a service it could be called, where a battle was little more than a mockery, and the slain, as on an opera stage, were up and fighting tomorrow.

At length they rose to go, and the Venetian thus addressed their hostess: "Excellent lady, may we leave under your roof for a day or two this bag of gold?" "You may," she replied gaily; "but remember, we fasten only with a latch. Bars and bolts we have none in our village, and if we had there would be your security?" "In your word, lady."

"But what if I died tonight? Where would it be then?" said she laughingly. "The money would go to the church, for none could claim it."

"Perhaps you will favor us with an acknowledgment?"

"If you will write it."

An acknowledgment was written accordingly, and she signed it before Master Bartolo, the village physician, who had just called by chance to learn the news of the day, the gold to be delivered when applied for, but to be delivered (these were the words) not to one nor to two, but to the three—words wisely introduced by those to whom it belonged, knowing what they knew of each other. The gold they had just released from a miser's chest in Perugia, and they were now on a scent that promised more.

They and their shadows were no sooner departed than the Venetian returned, saying, "Give me leave to set my seal on the bag, as the others have done." And she placed it on a table before him, but in that moment she was called away to receive a cavalier who had just dismounted from his horse, and when she came back it was gone. The temptation had proved irresistible. The man and the money had vanished together.

"Wretched woman that I am!" she cried as in an agony of grief she fell on her daughter's neck. "What will become of us? Are we again to be cast out into the wide world? Unhappy child, would that thou hadst never been born!" And all day long she lamented, but her tears availed her little. The others were not slow in returning to claim their due, and there were no tidings of the thief. He had fled far away with his plunder. A process against her was instantly begun in Bologna, and what defense could she make; how release herself from the obligation of the debt? Willfully or in negligence she had parted with it to one, who she should have kept it for all, and inevitable ruin awaited her.

"Were I as mighty as I am weak," said he, "my fears for you would make me as nothing. But I will be there, Gianetta, and may the friend of the friendless give me strength in that hour! Even now my heart fails me, but come what will, while I have a leaf to shut you and your mother or shall never part. I will beg through the world for you."

The day arrives and the court assembles. The claim is stated and the evidence given. And now the defense is called for, but none is made. Not a syllable is uttered, and after a pause and a consultation of some minutes the judges have pronounced to give judgment, silence having preceded to give judgment, when the Venetian proclaimed in the court, when the judge rises and thus addresses them: "Reverend signors, young as I am, I venture to speak in behalf of one who has none else to help her! I will not keep you long. Much has been said, much on the sacred nature of the obligation, and we acknowledge it in the full force. Let it be fulfilled, and to the best of our power. It is what we solicit, what we revere. It is what we love, the bag of gold to quire. But to whom is the bag of gold to be delivered? What says the bond? Not to one, not to two, but to the three. Let the three stand forth and claim it."

From that day—for who can doubt the issue!—none was sought, none employed, but the subtle, the elegant Lorenza, who wealth followed her. Now need I say how soon he sat at his marriage feast or who sat beside him.—Exchange.
