

THE WEDDING DRESS.

Barbara and Lettice Maitland were orphans, the children of a doctor whose genius had developed itself more in the direction of spending than saving, and who at his death had left his family almost penniless.

Now, however, Barbara was earning a modest income as assistant secretary to Lady Glendower, well known for her philanthropic efforts, and Lettice added to their store by teaching the children of a prosperous linen draper.

Lettice had been for some weeks staying at Broadstairs with her young charges, and Barbara was alone, but much happened during these few weeks, much that Lettice is at present in ignorance of.

If we enter their little sitting room and listen to the conversation being carried on by the two occupants, we shall learn the nature of what has taken place. One occupant is Barbara Maitland herself.

The other occupant is a man about 40, dark and handsome, albeit tanned by exposure to wind and weather, as well he may, having only lately returned from his fruit ranch in California. He is Lady Glendower's brother.

"It all seems so strange," said Barbara, "to think that we are actually engaged to each other, and yet that we don't profess to love each other in the very least."

"Yes," responded her companion. Then he added, "Barbara, would you not like to know why I first thought of taking a fruit ranch in California?"

"That was the cause," And Geoffrey placed in her hand a tiny morocco case, wherein was framed the portrait of a lovely girl, spirituelle, yet full of vivacity, with deep blue eyes and golden hair.

"She died, and now, little woman, you know why I told you I could never make love to any woman again. I was nearly mad with grief for a time after I lost her, and I went out to California and plunged madly into work. At first, as you know, things did not prosper, and I lost a lot of money. Now I have regained all I lost and am comparatively a rich man, but if I am to succeed and take a large number of pupils, as I hope to do, a wife is an absolute necessity to me."

That same evening Lettice arrived. Lettice was 19 and had a tall, supple figure and a face of wondrous beauty. Her eyes were of that rare blue violet shade, her hair a soft nut brown. They had finished tea, and Barbara was seated in a low chair by the open window, Lettice on a stool at her feet.

"What, Barbara—a new ring?" cried the younger sister, capturing Barbara's left hand and examining the lovely sapphire flashing on the third finger. "Ah, you are blushing! What have you been doing while I have been away? Come, tell me all about it."

"I have been getting engaged," replied Barbara demurely, and then, to her sister's great surprise, she told her all about it.

So Lettice was introduced to this new brother, and the new brother and Lettice got on very nicely together. Lettice was just of an age to be fascinated by a man of Geoffrey's age and style rather than by one nearer to her own age, and Geoffrey was taken by her fresh, girlish ways and by her natural, unconventional style.

So it was all arranged—a marriage of mutual satisfaction and esteem, but no love-making.

But the little god was not to be cheated. So two hearts, after one ecstatic bound of passionate joy, as they realized that they are all the world to each other, are plunged in anguish and despair as they also realize that they both are in honor bound never to be more than friends.

Look into Geoffrey Selhurst's room late one evening toward the end of August as he paces up and down, heedless of the fact that the clock is already registering the small hours.

"Fool—fool that I was!" he ejaculated. "Fool to tell myself that my heart was dead and buried with my lost love, and now it is beating as wildly and with as passionate love for another, and I may not claim her. I am bound in honor to her sister."

"Barbara shall never know it," murmured Lettice as she lies awake in her silent misery through the long night. "I will bear my pain alone. Her life shall not be spoiled."

It was the evening before the wedding, a lovely, still September evening. The three were together in the Maitlands' little sitting room.

"Hah, you have not tried on your wedding dress," cried Lettice. "It looks lovely. Do go up stairs and put it on. I know that Geoffrey is dying to see it."

"Yes, do," said Geoffrey. "I should like to see it."

"Very well," said Barbara, smiling. "I will run and put it on."

For a few seconds silence prevails. Then Lettice crosses over to Geoffrey, and, taking both his hands, gazes at him with sorrow laden eyes.

Mrs. L. E. Browning, of Pueblo, Painfully Afflicted from a Complication of Diseases—Her Remarkable Fortitude.

The hurry and bustle of the housewife is extremely wearing upon the delicate organism of womanhood. Her intense earnestness in whatever she undertakes, tempts her constantly to go beyond her strength.

"One day, after considerable treatment, my physician brought me a box of pills. 'You need a tonic,' he said, 'and something that will act at once, and this is the best medicine I know of for that purpose.'"

"I opened the box and showed me the little pink globes. 'These are Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People,' he said, 'but you need not be alarmed, they are not physic, and my word for it, they'll do you good.'"

"Before I had been taking them a week I noticed a great improvement in my condition. Soon my rheumatism was gone, I grew stronger each day and now am in the best of health."

The lady was Mrs. L. E. Browning, of 1154 East 4th St., Pueblo, Colorado.

PHUNNYGRAFS.

Bridegroom (in the parlor)—Darling, you seem sad; is it possible that you regret the step you have taken?

Bride—No, dearest; I'm only worried, that's all.

Lidegroom—Worried! Why, my angel what can you have to worry about?

Bride—I've been trying to remember something that we might have forgotten, and I can't.

"My wife," said the man who wanted to air his private history, "actually thinks more of a little idiotic, saucer-shaped dog we've got than she does of me."

"And venture to say," said the man with a talent for saying mean things, "that it isn't much of a dog at that."

Editor—You haven't been in this business very long?

New Reporter—No, I am almost a novice at it.

Editor—That's what I supposed when in your report of the conflagration of Bones' stable last night you failed to call fire the red-tongued demon.—Ex.

It Looked Suspicious They were sitting on the broad veranda of a summer resort hotel and the one in light gray ventured to say to the one in white that her husband was evidently very devoted.

"What do you mean?" asked the one in white, knitting her brow and looking troubled.

"Why he writes you every day, doesn't he?" returned the one in gray.

"Yes. That's just what troubles me," said the one in white, actually scowling at the thought.

Troubles you?"

"Certainly. I can't help thinking he's afraid I'll pack up and come home unexpectedly if he doesn't."—Chicago Post.

Literary Notes.

On the 8th day of October more than 10,000 students were on the rolls as members of the first Freshman class of the Cosmopolitan University. The confusion into which the plans regarding the Cosmopolitan's educational work were thrown by the retirement of President Andrews, in order to meet the urgent wishes of his friends at Brown University, has been met by the acceptance of the Presidency by Dr. Ediphalet Potter, President Potter has been at the head of two great colleges for nearly 25 years, and brings to work exceptional talents as an organizer and a man of broad culture and common sense ideas. He is already at Irvington engaged in organizing his staff of professors. The work of the University has been grouped under fifteen heads, covering the various branches of knowledge. Each of these will be in charge of a professor. As soon as the task of selection is complete, the students will be assigned their work and the largest Freshman class in the history of the universities of the world will be given its studies.

The first Thanksgiving dinner was celebrated in this country two hundred and seventy-six years ago, at Plymouth Mass. The whole American army was present—it numbered 27 men. Miles Standish, the backward lover of Priscilla sat at the feast, while Priscilla served at the tables. The story will appear in the November issue of the Ladies' Home Journal. Here Indians and whites sat down together by the tables set in the woods, and enjoyed the roast turkey, beanstuds, clam chowder, fish, salad cakes, fruit and other delicacies provided. It was at this historic dinner that the first oysters were served. The illustrations of the article show portraits of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage sagely observes that "a newspaper whose columns overflow with advertisements of business men has more influence in attracting attention to and building up a town than any other agency employed. People go where there is business. Capital and labor will locate where there is an enterprising community. No power on earth is so strong to build up a town as a newspaper well patronized, and its power should be appreciated."—Keystone.
