The Campaign of 1898.

The campaign of 1898 is rapidly approaching, and a great deal of anxiety is felt by all parties as to the result. Never since the republican party came into existence was there a time when its principles were more popular than they are today...

The HEADLIGHT believes that in politics the wishes and interests of the individual should be made subservient to the interests of the entire party. Whether or not certain individuals get certain offices signifies nothing at all...

Our City Election.

The city election is over, and a new set of officers has been chosen to attend to the affairs of the city for the coming year. These officials are all good men, better than many of their fellow citizens...

The new mayor has all the qualifications to make him a thoroughly competent officer. A man of excellent character, mature judgment and legal training, there is every reason to look forward to a successful administration of the affairs of his office.

The council is composed of equally capable business men. Mr. Knudson is the only hold over. His record in the last council for fearless advocacy of what he believed was right, was as good as any man need want.

The right thing for all to do now, no matter how they voted, is to stand by the new officials and assist them in making their administration the most prosperous of any administration since the incorporation of the city.

R. R. Hays.

The announcement of the death of R. R. Hays, on Monday, cast a pall of gloom over the entire city. Mr. Hays was well known, and well beloved by all his fellow citizens. Even those who differed with him most in opinion on political and other matters, held him in high and deserved esteem for his many noble qualities of mind and heart.

In the full prime of his physical manhood he looked forward to yet many years of joyous and successful life, but death, the stern destroyer of human hopes and expectations, stood near at hand and the promising career was brought to an untimely close.

With bitter tears of sorrow for their irreparable loss, and sympathy with those near and dear to him, his friends have folded his hands and laid his manly form away to its final rest, but the memory of his noble life and kindly deeds, long after his body shall have crumbled to dust, will continue to live on and on.

A Vigorous Cuban Policy.

If President McKinley insists on an ultra conservative policy on the Cuban question, he may find himself out of harmony with congress and the republican party in general which, in its platform at St. Louis pledged itself to a vigorous American policy.

estimate Spain's promises at their true value, and their battle cry, 'independence or death' ought surely to find an answering echo in the heart of every true American, who has in his breast the spirit of our Revolutionary sires.

Our congress should recognize the belligerency of the Cubans, and Spain, which was in such haste to recognize the "Confederate States of America" would surely have no right to complain. But America should do her manifest duty, let Spain do or say whatever she may.
