DELIBERATE SUICIDE BY A GIRL.

MEBORD, Oct. 10.—Miss Doeta Worlow, daughter of M. E. Worlow, residing about 15 miles east from here, committed suicide yesterday by hanging. She was engaged to be married to James Wyland, whose suicide by shooting was reported about two weeks ago. It is now known that they had agreed to end their lives, and that they had an appointment to meet the evening on which Wyland killed himself for that purpose, he having told her that he would bring a bottle of laudanum when he came. The body of Miss Worlow was found in the barn, where she committed the deed, and the matter is shrouded in mystery, and no one seems to be able to assign any cause. Both were of respectable and well-to-do families. They were to have been married October 1.

CATTLE AND HOG POET.

New Orleans Live Stock Paper Strikes a New String. The New Orleans Live Stock Enterprise, the reporter for the New Orleans market, makes a bid for popularity by jumping into "poetry" to quote the market. From an issue of recent date the following is taken: Milk cows still in good demand; Beeves and yearlings on a stand; Suckling calves are sure to lands; Sheep are dull and still on hand; Mastic furnished by the band; Robelets of beef extremely light; Milk cows prices out of sight. Calves and yearling selling right. Mastfed hogs be sure to slight. Cornfed active—outlook bright, Sheep, if fat, and not too light. Shippers, be here Thursday night.

TILLAMOOK BOY.

Heard From Who is With the Oregon Lads at Manila.

[TO THE EDITOR TILLAMOOK HEADLIGHT.] MANILA, Aug. 20th, 1898. As I have a few minutes to spare, I will give you a short synopsis of the battle of Manila city. On Friday evening, at nine o'clock, nine companies of the Oregon volunteers received these orders: "Prepare for action in light marching order and report your companies at three o'clock on Saturday morning, August 13th. Immediately the orders were carried into execution, and packing of blankets and personal effects, were soon complete. At about 10 o'clock p.m., the captain of their respective companies received orders: "Report your companies at headquarters for the purpose of issuing 200 rounds of ammunition per man."

Packing continued nearly all night. The boys were overjoyed at the unexpected orders, as we all had expected to stay at Cavite and guard the American stores at that place.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, August 13th, the bugler of the guard held assembly, and all the companies fell in to their proper places and marched to the boat landing. Here we boarded the Chinese side wheeler Kwonchoi, which immediately pulled out into the Bay of Manila and awaited orders. At 8:00 o'clock the flagship Olympia gave the signal: "Get under way with men at quarters in your respective places, with the Kwonchoi in the lead, and steam to within five miles of Manila city and await signals."

This order was carried into execution, and at 8:30 we arrived at appointed place off Manila and awaited orders, the Kwonchoi lying in the rear of the admiral McCulloch.

Admiral Dewey thinking it was not necessary to use his whole fleet, only took the following boats: Olympia (flagship), Raleigh, Boston, McCulloch, and a little gunboat that Dewey captured during the battle of Manila Bay, called the Caloa.

At 9 o'clock the Olympia made signal: "Prepare for Action," and the boys on board the men-of-war could be seen hurrying about.

At exactly 9:30 the Olympia made signal: "Begin Action." One moment later the Olympia sent the first shot towards the enemy from her forward deck, immediately followed by the other battleships. The battle was on. The first few shots fell short and struck in the water, throwing water and spray forty and fifty feet into the air. After they had gotten the range they turned "side-to" and sent broadside after broadside into Fort Malata, the enemy's strongest fort. The Caloa and Boston steamed in to within one mile from shore and poured in many broadsides. The Caloa then steamed to within half-a-mile of the Spanish guns, sent shot after shot into the fort. Steaming along the shore towards the north she attacked the Spanish soldiers that were trying to hold the remainder of our forces from trying to enter the city from that side.

Fort Malata having been silenced, the Kwonchoi steamed swiftly toward Manila city and landed the Oregon boys on the breakwater.

We soon gained the city after that passing over three walls, and as we passed each wall we hoisted the American flag and tore down the Spanish flag. The Spaniards were in great fright, consequently they could not do much fighting. They finally hoisted the white flag, but they would not pull down the Spanish flag.

At exactly four o'clock p.m. they hoisted the white flag and hostilities ceased. The Oregon boys were the first to land at Cavite and first to land in Manila city.

The boys will all be home for Christmas dinner.

CHAS. L. NEWMAN.

Old Nelson in Disress.

Her majesty's ship Nelson, in Melbourne harbor, has been ordered to be sold by the admiralty. It was built in 1814, and was then the largest line-of-battle ship in the British navy. Its oak timbers are said to be as sound as when they were put in.

A Monotonous Climate.

It is said that the sameness of climate in the Sandwich islands makes a northerner almost hope for an earthquake to smash up the monotony.

GOSSIP ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE.

Marion Crawford says of himself: 'Most of my boyhood was spent under a French governess. Not only did I learn that language from her, but all my studies—geography, arithmetic, etc.—were taught me in French, and I learned to write it with great readiness as a mere boy, because it was the language of my daily tasks. The consequence is that to this day I write French with the ease of English.'

George W. Smalley, the American tor who is correspondent in this country for the London Times, had no greater trial during the war with Spain than the humiliation of having his dispatches passed upon by Grant Squires, General Greeley's assistant censor. When Mr. Smalley was receiving $15,000 a year as London correspondent of the New York Tribune Squires was making $7 a week as a reporter for that paper.

Lord Wolseley, who is at the head of the English army, is a very busy man. One day he is in Scotland, the next day reviewing the troops at Yorkshire, then in London inspecting the volunteers, a day or two after witnessing a night attack at Chatham and torpedo trials at Sheerness, and then with the cadets at Sandhurst. The commander-in-chief's apparent youthfulness makes people forget that he is now 65 years of age and has been actively employed in the army for forty-six years.

Mr. Curzon's term as viceroy of India will last five years. His salary is about $100,000 a year, with all expenses paid by the government, and he is expected to live in great magnificence. This salary and perquisites seem small compared with the incomes of three of the native princes who are allies of Great Britain, and each has $15,000,000 a year. The office of Indian viceroy is one of great power and great responsibility. While the late Lord Lytton hated for his tyranny and exactions, Lord Ripon, whom Mr. Curzon succeeds, was idolized by the people, who are a grateful people when well treated.

Durham White Stevens, upon whom has been conferred the Japanese decoration of the Second Order of the Rising Sun, had previously received two other decorations from the Japanese government. His acquaintance with Japan began in 1873, when he was appointed secretary of the United States legation at Tokio. In 1894 he received the second-class decoration of the Order of the Sacred Treasure for services rendered during the Japanese-Chinese war, and in connection with the conclusion of the new treaty between Japan and the United States.

The Sirdar of the Egyptian army, says an English paper, once had a very extraordinary experience, having swallowed a bullet with which he had been wounded, and which he now preserves as a memento. During the campaign of 1888 Major Kitchener was hit in the side of the face by a bullet during a skirmish near Suakin, and was taken down the Nile and thence to the Citadel hospital at Cairo, where, despite all the efforts of the surgeons, the bullet could not be located. The wound was a healthy one and soon healed, and the medical officers came to the conclusion that the bullet had worked its way out, without being noticed, on the passage down the Nile. The major's nurse tempted his appetite with a tasty beefsteak, which the major had no sooner attacked than he put his hand to his throat, exclaiming: "Bilto, if there was no bone in this steak, I've swallowed that bullet. I felt it go down." This proved to be the case.

A SPECIAL from Cheyenne says: Colonel D. Linscott, of Medicine Bow reached Cheyenne to-day from Boston and points in Maine. He has been in the East selling western horses, and reports the market in Boston, New York and other Eastern cities strong and firm for well bred and broke western horses. He says the horse buyers in the East have become convinced that there is far more wear and tear to the Rocky mountain raised horse than to one of the fat, flabby natives of the East. The value of a western horse in an eastern market is not only dependent on his breeding, but how well he is broken.

President on Office Seeking.

A good story of President Kruger is told in an article on "Mining and Politics in the Transvaal," in the National Review. Some of the president's young relations applied to him for office. He considered awhile, and said: "I can do nothing; for the high offices of the state are in firm hands, and for little clerkships you are too stupid."

MILK IN THE COCONUT.

These Are Two Good Ways of Getting at it When One Wants to Drink It.

Every boy knows the three eyes to be found in one end of a coconut, and many a boy has bored these eyes out, or one or two of them, with the small blade of a pocketknife so as to get at the milk in the coconut, which he has then drained out into a cup or drunk direct from the coconut itself. But there is a more fascinating way still of getting at the milk in the coconut.

By this other method the coconut is opened at the other end from the eyes. The coconut is struck all around gently and repeatedly with a hammer, or a stone will do, at a distance of about one-third of the way down from the top, about where the arctic circle would be on a globe. A continual gentle tapping will finally crack the shell of the nut all around; not in a line exactly on the circle, perhaps, but pretty near to it. Sometimes it cracks shell and meat of the nut, too, so that both can be lifted off together, sometimes it cracks out only a shell cap at the top, which is lifted off, and the cap of meat underneath is then cut out around with a knife.

And then there you are with a white-lined coconut cup to drink from.

THE INDIAN BLUSHED.

How He Quietly Rebuked the Girls for Their Impertinence and Curiosity.

Visitors at the world's fair in 1893 will recall the Indian exhibit or encampment on the shore of the south pond. One of the tents or wigwags was occupied by an athletic and fine-looking, but somewhat taciturn, specimen of young Indian manhood as his particular home, and while it was open at all proper times for the inspection of visitors, he resented any approach tinctured with curiosity, says Youth's Companion.

A bevy of young women dropped into his tent one day before his usual hour for opening it, and found him sewing a rent in a blanket.

"See how he blushes!" exclaimed one of the visitors. "We have caught him doing squaw's work." "Why, that's his natural color," giggled another. "He always blushes." "Yes, young ladies," said the Indian, in perfectly good English, "he blushes for some of the civilized and enlightened white Americans of the nineteenth century."

The visitors joined him in blushing and shortly afterward went out without further remarks.

WHITE LEATHERS.

Cowhide, Calfskin and Sheepskin, and the Uses to Which They Are Chiefly Put.

White cowhide has long been used for various purposes, though its place has now been taken to a considerable extent by other and cheaper leathers. It is used, for example, in making mill-pender tips, and its use in making military belts is familiar. For this purpose it is made up with the flesh side out, and the belts are whitened as occasion may require with chalk or pipe clay, says the New York Sun.

White calfskin is more extensively used than white cowhide. White calf is used for fine and costly work in book binding, it may be for gift books. White sometimes for prayer books. White calf is also used for suspender tips. More extensively used than either the white cowhide or white calfskin are the white sheepskins. White sheepskin is used also for suspender tips, and for covering trusses and other articles of metal, and for the trimmings of shoes. It is used for book binding, especially for the binding of medical books, in which use it is first sprinkled with a coloring material which gives it a mottled appearance.

Reversed.

A golf match was in progress on one of Scotland's famous greens, and a couple of the players were very unevenly matched. One was shortsighted, and much to the disgust of his caddie, had made some extremely bad shots. "How far is it to the next hole, caddie?" he asked, peering through his spectacles in the direction of the white flag. "A gude drive and a 'putt'!" answered the caddie, sharply. The player drove, but only sent the ball a few yards. "Man, man," said the caddie, sorrowfully, "that's awful! Ye've played the 'putt' first!"
