Weask that every citizen give them their support aud put implicit confidence in them. They have been elected with a preponderance of votes, and whatever antipathy may have existed during the election let that be obliterated, and, as loyal citizens, bow to the will of the majority, who have spoken in no unmistakeable tones. Some people are chronic kickers from away back, and we suppose the new council will come in for its share of that, but to keep continually kicking city or county officials rarely accomplish anything. The new council, like the old, no doubt, will carefully cousider whatever matter is brought before it, and we rely upon it doing what is right.
