PRATTLE OF YOUNGSTERS.

"You naughty, careless boy! Have I got to buy you another pair of new trousers?"
 "I guess so. But when I'm a man I'm going to wear pants!"

Little Nettie accompanied her parents on a trip across the lake recently and after being out a short distance she began to get seasick.

"How do you do feel, Nettie?" asked her mamma.
 "Oh," was the reply, "I just feel like I wanted to unswallow my breakfast."

"Yes, dear children," said the teacher, "we must throw away our naughty faults. They are like wormy chestnuts. Now, what do you do with a wormy chestnut when you find one? Jane may answer."

"Please, ma'am, I give it to my little brother, Petie."

"No, thank you. I don't care for any," said little Marie, as her papa passed the cake.

"Why dear," said he, I thought you were fond of cake?"

"So I am," she replied, "but I heard mamma say it wasn't quite perfect and when she says that it must be something awful."

"Oh, look what a pretty little moon!" exclaimed 4-year-old Edith to her little brother, as she looked from her grand-ma's window at the small crescent in the western sky.

"Fshaw!" replied the unappreciative brother, "I don't think it's half as pretty as the big round moon we had at home two weeks ago."

Johnny, aged 5, had a habit of using his conversation every big word he happened to hear, regardless of its meaning. One morning he and his elder brother were trying to wash from the same basin to Johnny's detriment, and he ran into the kitchen, exclaiming, "Mamma, Charley's metropolizing the whole laundry!"

When Marriage is the Topic.

The wedded state is a favorite subject with the epigram makers. From a very old ballad we take this:

There was a criminal in a cart
 A-going to be hanged;
 Respite to him was granted,
 And cart and crowd did stand,
 To know if he would marry a wife
 Or rather choose to die;
 "T'other's the worst—drive on the cart!"
 The criminal did reply.

More modern is this verse:
 I would advise a man to pause
 Before he takes a wife;
 In fact, I see no earthly cause
 He should not pause for life.

Who, by the way, is the author who describes a second marriage as being "the triumph of hope over experience?"

Samuel Lover's matrimonial epigram is very apposite:

Though matches are all made in heaven,
 they say,
 Yet Hymen (who mischief oft hatches)
 Sometimes deals with the house t'other side of the way,
 And there they make Lucifer matches.

BRIGHT AND BREEZY.

The Young Man—There is no fool like an old fool.
 The Elderly Gentleman—He is conspicuous by his rarity, that is all.

Mother (to little Martin, who has been put to bed for misdemeanors)—What shall I say if callers come this afternoon and ask where my little boy is?

Martin (promptly)—Tell them you haven't any little boy.

Miss Sackerin—What would you say if you saw me with a cigar in my mouth?

Jack Weedner—I should say, as I always have said, that I am not fond of pretty cigar holders.

"I've called to tell you, sir, that the photographs you took of us the other day are not at all satisfactory; why, my husband looks like an ape."

"Well, madame, you should have thought of that before you had him taken."

The Major—You know nothing of the horrors of war, sir.

Editor—Oh, I don't know, I've been ploughing through war stories ever since the conflict began.

"The man," said the Cornfed Philosopher, "who is content to remain a mere hewer of wood and drawer of water seldom becomes a hewer of ice, so to speak."

Mixed Motives. Mrs. Chatterton—Helen is getting up a club to study "Faust" this winter.

Chat—Is she so intellectual?

Mrs. Chatterton—No; but she wants to show off that she can pronounce "Goethe."

They had been speaking of foreign policy, and esotic politics generally.

"We see as through a glass darkly!" sighed the Thinking Man.

"Let's have another glass!" exclaimed the Practical Man, leading the way to bar.

Thus, little by little, is made up the great Public mind.

"I am trying to get up a subscription for ice yachting," said the amateur promoter. "What can I put you down for?"

"What are you going to contribute?" asked the business man. "The wind?"

It isn't always the man with the longest whiskers who gets the biggest salary.

Watts—How are you on policy of the open door.

Lushforth—If you mean on Sundays, I am with you.

"The trouble with you," said the drum to the cornet, "is that you never do anything unless you're on a foot."
 "Well, at least," replied the cornet, "they do not have to beat me to make me do my duty."

Amicus—Which do you find the harder, the beginning of a novel or the end.
 Great Author—The end, of course. Where a novel is going on well as a serial at space rates it is simply heart-rendering to have to bring it to an end.

Secret Service Secretary—I want a man who has skill in translating ciphers.
 Aspirant—Then I'm your man. For two years now I've put up perscriptions in a drug store.

"What was the result of the experiment of having a handsome young woman instead of the regular deacons pass the contribution boxes?"

"It was a failure. After a few Sundays the young men found they were chipping in more than they could afford, and they quit coming to church."

"A girl's aspirations go beyond mere matrimony, these days."

"Yes, they seem often to include divorce as well."

"Has Mr. Bilden a good memory?"

"Well," replied the decree friend; "I must say it depends somewhat on whether he's owing or collecting."

His Friend—How did you come out with your invention for making dustless streets?

The Inventor—It left me with a dustless pocket.

Sometimes the chrisanthemum on the stylish young man's coat lapel conceals a grease spot underneath.

"My hero!" said she.
 "Well?" said he.
 And then she did.

"Poor old turkey!" said little Pollie, sympathetically, as the well-stuffed bird was brought on the table. "Just to think of being so chuck-full of lovely stuffing and not being able to enjoy it!"

"What are 'the powers of Europe' that the Americans allude to so frequently whenever there is any rumor of war?" inquired the favorite of the harem.

"Those, my dear," answered the sultan, lazily, after pausing to drink a cup of coffee and light another cigarette, "are merely conversational powers."
