TOLD OUT OF COURT.

"That lawyer is such a great friend of yours," said one business man to another, "that I presume he charged you only a nominal fee?"

"Yes, oh, yes. Phenomenal; bigger than the infernal verdict."

"Hold up your hands!"

At this startling command every one of the six or eight stalwart men, taken by surprise, mechanically complied.

Then the voice was heard again, droning out these words:

You and each of you do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in the case now in hearing shall be the truth, the whole truth, etc.

She—So you have decided to be a lawyer and are enthusiastic at the prospect. They say that love of a profession and love of a woman conflict.

He—Not necessarily. In love and law there is a difference, but not a vital one. It goes to form rather than substance. In love the attachment precedes the declaration, while in law the declaration comes before the attachment. In your case, for instance, I have long held the attachment. I now file the declaration.

A justice of the peace in Texas, on the fourth trial of a petty but tenaciously fought case in which no appeal could be had, allowed the witnesses on cross-examination to suit themselves about answering questions. A witness would say, "I won't answer no such g—d—fool question as that," and the justice would say, with similar emphasis, "that's right."

There was a fight between the attorneys because one of them tried to stem the rushing, roaring tide of the other's eloquence to the jury by calling him a liar. These amenities were apparently regarded as proper incidents of the trial, but on complaint made against the orator for "using loud and vociferous language in a public place, to-wit, the court house," he was convicted by the justice and fined $15.

The justice seems to have a new version of Dr. Watts, which says: "Let lawyers delight to scrape and fight, for tis their nature to, but to yell like fury when addressing the jury, only imps of satan will do."

Not long since the notice, "Court Adjourned Sine Die," was posted on the door of the supreme court in Brooklyn some gentleman with an artistic and highly trained sense of humor added a "d" to the word "die" and went on his way rejoicing. Next day a person who makes a practice of haunting the public buildings in Brooklyn and professes acquaintance with every well known man in the vicinity, dropped into the clerk's office.

"See here," he said, "when did Sine pass in his checks?"

"What's that?" demanded the astonished clerk.

"When did Sine die?" I see the courts are closed on account of it."

"Ob," said the clerk, pulling himself together, "he died yesterday. Did you know him?"

"Know him? I should say I did. Knew his father before him. Too bad, ain't it?" And Sine's bereaved friend passed out with his burden of sorrow.

PRATTLE OF YOUNGSTERS.

Little Mildred—Say, Tommy, do you know what a category is?

Little Tommy—Course! Its the place where cats go when they die.

Fond Grandmamma—Geordie, tell the lady what George Washington did.

Geordie—He never said a blamed word.

"My doll can shut her eyes and go to sleep just lovely."

"Huh! My doll never goes to sleep at all; she's got insomniac."

Decerning Child (who has heard some remarks by his father)—Are you a new nurse?

Nurse—Yes, dear.

Child—Well, then, I am one of those boys who can only be managed by kindness, so you had better get some sponge cake and candy at once.

The Philadelphia Record tells of a teacher who had just finished explaining the use of the ditto marks, when she noticed one of her young searchers for knowledge searching for it in a half-dime novel. So she made him stay after school and write the sentence "Always pay attention" a hundred times. In a very short time he gave a glad shout:

"I've did it!"

"What kind of language is that?" she remarked severely; "and you surely haven't had time to do it."

"Well I'm done it, then—anyhow, here it is."

He held up his paper. The sentence was written once at the top and the remaining surface was covered with dots.

"But you haven't done it!" she exclaimed.

He gazed at her scornfully.

"Course I have—them ditto marks—made 'em ninety-nine times—they're good things."

What else was there to do but to let him go at once, which she did?

"Edgar was afraid he would faint when he asked papa for my hand."

"Did he?"

"No; papa fainted."

"Do you suppose Patti's engagement is a love match? Her charms are rather passe, you know."

"My dear girl, money never grows old."

"Here is a case of a man who stole a kiss from a woman and has now been declared insane."

"You never showed any symptoms of insanity," she returned rather regretfully.

"The bookkeeper," said the typewriter girl, "came near proposing to me yesterday afternoon."

"What did he say?"

"He asked me to hold out my finger. I did so and he blew a ring of smoke on it."

The Kansas Hen.

We have read of Maud on a summer day. Who raked, barefooted, the new-mown hay,

We have read of the maid in the early morn, Who milked the cow with the crumpled horn,

And we've read the lays that the poets sing Of the rustling corn and the flowers of spring,

But of all the lays of tongue or pen There's naught like the lay of the Kansas hen.

Long, long before Maud rakes her hay, The Kansas hen has begun to lay,

And ere the milkmaid stir a peg, The hen is up and has dropped her egg;

The corn must rustle and flowers spring If they hold their own with the barnyard ring.

If Maud is needing a hat and gown She doesn't hustle her hay to town,

But goes to the store and obtain her suit With a basketful of her fresh hen fruit;

If the milkmaid's beau makes a Sunday call She doesn't feed him on milk at all,

And stuffs him full of chicken fry. And when the old man wants a horn,

Does he take the druggist a load of corn? Not much! He simply robs a nest,

And to town he goes—you know the rest, He hangs around with the cliques and rings,

And talks of politics and things, While his poor wife stays at home and scowls,

But is saved from want by those self-same fowls; For, while her husband lingers there,

She watches the cackling hens with care, And gathers eggs, and the eggs she'll hide

Till she saves enough to stem the tide. Then hail, all hail, to the Kansas hen,

The greatest blessing of all to men! Throw up your hats and emit a howl

For the preserving barnyard fowl! Corn may be king, but it's plainly seen

The Kansas hen is the Kansas queen.
