ADVANCE IN MEDIAEVALISM.

Some Reflections on Liberty, Fraternity, Equality—How the World is Conducting Itself in Its Old Age.

The following pleasing intelligence appeared in print the other day, says the United States Investor: "Through foreclosures, John D. Rockefeller comes into possession of the entire city of Everett, Wash., with its 3,000 or 4,000 people for tenants. These include foreclosure of $1,500,000 mortgage against the Everett Land company, with its $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 worth of property, and foreclosure of mortgage against the Monte Criste mines and concentrator, which property Mr Rockefeller's representative purchased for $375,000." In other words, one man who not many years ago was working on a modest salary is today the owner of an entire city, with 3,000 or 4,000 retainers. This is a step in the direction of mediaevalism which the American people may contemplate with lively satisfaction. By reason of some great oversight the founders of this nation neglected to provide us with any of those distinctions of rank and influence which contribute so powerfully to the enchantment of social and economic conditions in the old world. Their minds were incapable of rising above the vulgar conceptions of society as an organization in which one person is intrinsically of as much importance as another. American civilization has been chafing under this restraint for 100 years. So acute and clever a people as we are were of necessity bound to recognize without any delay the mistake made by the founders of the government. We know that no greater absurdity was ever uttered than that "all men are created free and equal." The very attitude of the Federalist party was a protest against this most astonishing assumption. Did not every good Federalist of New England sincerely believe that the election of "Tom" Jefferson and his crew meant the overthrow of everything that was good in religion, morals and politics?

A Laughing Stock.

But the Federalist of 100 years ago was no more lacking in faith in humanity and in the dictum of the Declaration of Independence than are such eminent publicists as Carl Schurz, Senator Hoar and Edward Atkinson today. These excellent gentlemen have talked a good deal of late regarding the necessity of our clinging to the ideals of the fathers, whereas, as a matter of fact, the ideals of the fathers are a laughing stock to them. The fathers enunciated the doctrine of government by the people, but Schurz, Hoar and Atkinson believe, and practically assert, that the people are capable of governing themselves only so far as they pursue those policies that are advocated by Schurz, Hoar and Atkinson. These renowned students of the philosophy of history are in a very decided minority today, but they are not deterred by that fact from enjoying the secret consciousness that the fathers blundered when they declared that "all men are born free and equal."

Three Classes of Society.

But it is not alone in the department of political government that the monstrous error of the fathers has been demonstrated. The social and business life of a nation in the last century has also revealed this lamentable fact. Social distinctions were clearly recognized when the Declaration of Independence was drawn up and when the constitution of the United States was framed, but we are bound to confess that the feeling which exists between the different classes of the community then was one of social equality when compared with the existing relations of the different grades of society. The well-to-do classes 100 years ago were no doubt sincere in theoretically holding to a doctrine of the equality of man. But that theory has been discarded today, and if our fathers had been worthy sires of distinguished sons they never would have promulgated it. In fact, the superior classes today are so tenacious of the view that they are restoring to quite extreme measure to open the eyes of the world to the antiquated doctrine of the fathers. Society is now, like "all Gaul" of old, divided into three parts, those designed for ornament, those designed for usefulness, and those designed for mischief. The first class includes those persons of whose doings we delight to read in the "society columns" of the Sunday papers. We revel in the descriptions of their toilets, their summer houses, their yachts, their sumptuous balls and receptions, their Lucullan repasts. They impart a grace and dignity to the environment in which we find ourselves in this miserable world, and ill betide the wretch who would in the least curtail the round of their festivities. Let us remember that all clay is not alike, else our utensils would be all porcelain or all common pottery.

The Inferior Class.

The second class to whom we have referred comprises those designed for usefulness. These are like the lender so graphically described by Charles Lamb in language of Scripture—"he shall serve his brethren." The useful people generally have brains enough to know what is good for their superiors but not enough to know what is good for themselves. They are not entitled to much sympathy or respect and the dull round of mediocrity they deserve. The third class which we have alluded to is made up of those designed for mischief. This includes not only tramps, murderers, pickpockets and other dretched jailbird specimens but also such wretched creatures as those who still assert that all men are equal in the eye of Heaven and who by word and action strive to bring about a condition for mutual assistance (if not of brotherly love) in a world where chaos is so much in evidence.

A Man's Property.

But it is in the business life of the world that we discover the most convinced evidence that our fathers spoke "as doth the fool" when they strove to create the presumption that this nation had forever broken loose from all those traditions and policies which had kept the larger portion of the human race in bondage during preceding ages. To be sure, if we have abandoned the teaching of the fathers, the blame rests upon the fathers themselves. For it was the fathers who (in ignorance) established those systems under which monopolies have thrived in this country. But let the blame lie where it will, the fact is that there is fast growing up in the United States a system of vassalage that will equal anything that the past ages can show. Will any one dispute this fact when he reads that Mr John D. Rockefeller now owns the entire city of Everett, Wash., "with its 3,000 or 4,000 people for tenants"? To be sure, this amiable cross has come honestly enough by his 3,000 or 4,000 souls. He bought them, and they are his. We do not in the least object to his taking possession of his own—a man has a right to his property wherever he finds it—but we think the conditions which make such a creature as Rockefeller possible portend no good for the human race.

A Gay Old Age.

We presume that in every age it has been the fashion for people of not very good digestion to predict the speedy downfall of all human hopes. In short there never was a time when to a considerable portion of the race the world did not seem to be fast approaching a cataclysm. That trait of human nature is exemplified in every one of us, leading us to deplore the steady decadence of everything mundane since we were young. Making allowance, however, for that fact, most persons will be willing to admit that the problems confronting the world to-day are a little more serious than they have been in previous ages. That is so necessarily. The world is getting to be rather old. Even if we accept Usher's chronology we have to admit that 6,000 years is a long time for the race to fly at one another's throats and to waste with a prodigal hand the resources which Providence had provided for us. There are no new worlds to conquer. The last of the unexploited markets are now in the act of being taken possession of. The land upon the face of the planet is being gobbled up at a rate which implies no vacant tracts in the near future. Everything indicates that the world is ageing. The world is like an individual in one respect—it needs to treat itself kindly in its advancing years. But that is just what it does not seem inclined to do. It acts for all the world (if we may be pardoned the expression) like an ancient dandy who is determined to hold on to the pleasures of youth despite the gout and despite all the other ills to which this flesh of ours is heir. There is no fool like an old fool.

There is no more contemptible sight than an old wretch who attempts to outvie youth in its follies.

The World at Its Worst.

Now Rockefeller et al genus omne are a product of the world at its worst. They are the result of conditions which cannot operate for a very long time without precipitating a state of affairs that it is quite dreadful to contemplate. Let it be said that the writer of this article is not a moralist. He is not attempting to reform the world. He is not advocating any extreme view in sociology or economics. He is simply recording the impressions which must inevitably come to any one who makes a fair use of the eyes and brains with which Heaven has endowed him. It is not our purpose to indulge in prophecies. All that it is necessary for us to do is to recall the fact that man, even in these days, is a very primitive creature. He wears finer clothes and lives in a more pretentious house, and eats better food, and talks with a smoother tongue than ever before, but he is the same creature at heart that he was 6,000 years ago, governed by the same hopes and fears, and impelled by identically the same motives. Self preservation is the first law of nature. The development of such monstrosities as the Rockefellers and their kind cannot go on much longer without the principles of self-preservation that is implanted in the race asserting itself in some very positive manner. How do we not pretend to say; possibly by legislation, possibly in some more dreadful way. Of one thing we are sure, their claim will not allow itself to be totally enslaved, as bids fair to be the case in time under the present regime. We admit of course that such abnormal developments as Rockefeller are possible only as a result of the general inefficiency of mankind to compete in the race of life. But that fact has no bearing on our argument. The mass of mankind will not stop to consider that they have only themselves to blame. When the noise of their chains becomes loud enough they will return to their primitive manhood and act accordingly.
