

There is perhaps no spot where one can be so close to nature, and yet in touch with civilized world. You may, while camped amid the wildest and most picturesque scenery, enjoying a season of rare trout fishing, have your metropolitan newspaper thrown at your feet from day to day.

Perchance you are neither a hunter nor a fisher? Well, there is still abundant reason why you should come to Tillamook in the summer time. Her mountains and valleys, her rippling streams, her ocean beach, her cool summer climate, her green pastures, her sleek cattle, her contented and thrifty people, and the general air of peace, plenty and prosperity will do your city-fagged soul good. Man must now and then get back near old mother nature, if he would renew his hold upon life. The greatest are not without this primitive yearning. Diocletian, emperor of Rome, resigned after a rule of twenty years and become a farmer, and when he was urged to resume the scepter he had laid down, he answered: "If you could see the cabbages I raise in my garden, you would not ask me to take a throne." There are those who would not exchange a summer in Tillamook for a Kingdom.
