Freedom for Filipinos. Notwithstanding the persistent misrepresentations of the antiants this government proposes to deal fairly and liberally with the Filipinos. It does not intend to establish a despotism in the islands, although it does not contemplate handing down the American flag.

The United States is pledged to maintain a stable government in the Philippines and to protect the natives from themselves and from foreign aggression. It has promised the natives justice and a full measure of liberty.

Such is the attitude of McKinley's administration towards the Filipinos, and this pledge will be fulfilled, but the execution of it is delayed by the acts of the natives themselves.

It is difficult to believe that those who profess to fear militarism in the United States are serious and sincere. Our whole history shows the absurdity of such an apprehension.

Sherman should come back from the war, but those armies returned to civil life and were swallowed up among their fellow citizens without a ripple. After the war a considerable army was kept for a year or two on the Indian frontier and in some of the southern states, but no one thought there was any danger of militarism.

If there was any tendency on the part of the republican party toward militarism certainly there was an opportunity to show it in the war with Spain, but a republican congress authorized only such increase in the army as in the opinion of military experts was necessary and this for a limited time.

The simple truth is that the talk about the danger of militarism is pure cant. There may be a few people who seriously believe it, but most of those who profess to be sincere and talk only for political effect.

The wave of patriotism that swept over the country on the outbreak of the late war with Spain has exerted a powerful influence to obliterate sectionalism in this country. Veterans of the union army marched side by side with veterans of the confederate army.

This exhibition of patriotism by the people in every section has created a false impression and stimulated in the south a deplorable outbreak of glorification over the lost cause.

General Gordon declared that the confederates must continue to teach their children that the cause for which they fought was as righteous as that for which Grant, Sherman and Sheridan and the great hosts that saved the union were battling.

It is not now and never has been a debatable question who was right in the war against secession and disunion. It has never been a debatable question whether Abraham Lincoln ranked above Jefferson Davis or Ulysses S. Grant above Robert E. Lee.

olis at the expense of the government and voluntarily took the oaths to defend and protect the United States against enemies within or without, yet in the face of these sacred and solemn obligations raised his sword to strike down that government, should not be exalted, but execrated if not despised.

Admit that both sides in the great conflict believed they were fighting for a righteous cause, but one judgment can be passed on judgment day as to those who in violation of their oaths feebly deserted the flag and levied war upon the government they were sworn to uphold.

However much Americans everywhere rejoice over the obliteration of sectional differences, the time will ever come when loyalty and disloyalty will be alike revered, or when bravery in a wrong cause will command admiration and commendation equally with courageous devotion in the cause of right and justice.

Democratic comment on the matter in which the pops of Nebraska hogged the ticket is unfit to print. Mr. Gorman of Maryland isn't saying a word about the convention or the ticket. Life is too short to bother about tickets.

Bets of 5 and 7 to 1 on New York going for McKinley find so few takers that odds of 16 to 1 will be the rule presently.

Wharton Barker thinks the middle-roads have corralled the electoral vote of Georgia. Break the news gently to Hoke.

Eugene V. Debs, presidential nominee of the social democrats, talks of withdrawing in favor of Bryan. Discontented elements should flock together.

Kentucky democrats pulled off their state convention without the customary eruption. Colonel Jack Chinn was there but P. Wat Hardin, as a peace offering, remained away.

Simon Bolliver Buckner believes the nine tickets now in the field are sufficient for all political needs. A gold democratic ticket would be a menace to the peace of Kentucky.

Norman E. Mack, the foghorn of Bryanism in Western New York and recently the guest of Omaha's Tammany, declares that 16 to one is a dead issue. The wish is father to the thought.

Much astonishment is manifested in Pennsylvania because ex-Attorney General Palmer of that state carried the primaries of Luzerne county without the use of money. Strange things happen occasionally in the Keystone state.

and/or straightforward truth-telling on behalf of President McKinley, the people will respond with a great majority vote of confidence. Let the Bryan party have a monopoly of the humbug and deceit, of the little tricks and trite hypocrisies of campaign tactics.
