The city council on Monday took up the matter of placing electric lights in the residence portion of the city. It was decided that a committee be appointed to attend to it at once, with full power to act, so the president appointed Councilmen M. Leach, J. E. Tuttle and S. Brodhead to confer with Mr. Claude Thayer, who had promised to furnish fifteen 32-candle lights for $15 per month.
If the city was a little more hospitable to distinguished personages it would show to good advantage, and if we have been a little slow and not up to date in this respect, let us make an effort to improve. Let us have a business man's club, a push club, or something of that started, so that those who are interested in the development of Tillamook can get together and discuss matters, showing that we are just as enterprising as other progressive towns.

We are sorry to hear that another sanguinary pugilistic encounter has taken place between some of the citizens of the incorporated city of Nehalem, and we understand some of the participants are badly disfigured and bruised up on account of the ruction. As we understand a change of venue has been granted to try the charges in Justice Sam Downs' court, we will wait until we hear the evidence before we state who the culprits and victims are.
The bicycle ordinance is to be enforced by the city marshal, which compels bicyclists to dismount when riding on the side walks when within thirty feet of a pedestrian and have a light after dark. After discussing the matter on Monday evening the city council instructed the marshal to enforce the ordinance. President Cohn thought as the council had previously given a lot of time in the consideration of the ordinance, and as it had met with the approval of the citizens, he advised that it be enforced, in which all the councilmen acquiesced.
What kind of sarcasm is this from the two bit railroad town on the Columbia river? The Astoria Herald says: "There is some talk of raising a subsidy to induce Mr. Hammond to take the railroad away from Astoria. Talk about a railroad killing a town! There is a strong, corpse smell around Astoria. Before a railroad was built Astoria was the best business town on the coast, but what can we say for it now?" We do not want to give those who are trying hard to boom Astoria a feeling of the jimjams, but what will Astoria amount to when the salmon industry is played out? Bro. Curtiss had better advise turning town lots into teat pulling farms.
Captain W. W. Harts, United States engineer, came in on the steamer on Saturday to inspect the government work improving Tillamook bay and Hoquar-ton slough, which he was pleased to see had made rapid progress. As the last appropriation is nearly expended, work will have to stop in a few weeks until another appropriation is made, which cannot be secured until congress meets. Should this be secured soon after the meeting of congress, Captain Harts is of the opinion that work on the improvements will be resumed about March. Mr. Frank Batter, the engineer in charge of the works here, has proved himself thoroughly competent and carried out the work with great satisfaction, as the improvements will show. Captain Harts left on the stage Monday evening.
Will Portland Build the Railroad?
It is satisfactory to know that the coal found in the Lower Nehalem coal fields is of sufficient quantity and quality to warrant a road being built from Portland to develop them. But will the capitalists of that city furnish the money to build it? It would not be necessary for us to ask that question if Portland was as enterprising as other cities of its size. Portland is too conservative for its own good, as is well known by those who have tried to get financial backing to start up industries. However that may be, here is an opportunity for Portland to become a manufacturing city, for coal, above all things, is necessary for that purpose. Considering the benefit that it would derive from these mines, the cost of building one hundred miles of railroad is insignificant. Besides, with the enormous amount of timber in the Nehalem country, that alone, to say nothing of the coal mines, would keep a railroad busy. Portland business men have complained about the business of Tillamook being diverted from that city to San Francisco, but here is an opportunity for Portland to secure a country rich in undeveloped resources as a feeder to that city. Astoria missed the opportunity when it lacked the business sagacity to secure this feeder, but lost its head in an effort to secure a railroad to Portland practically to buck river boats. Will Portland be indifferent and let the opportunity pass, thus playing right into the hands of San Francisco? An independent railroad from Portland, through the Nehalem coal fields to Tillamook City, would be a paying concern from the start. The coal mines, the immense amount of timber to be manufactured—both of which would give a large amount of tonnage—the dairy and fishing industries, would be sufficient to bring in large returns to the company, to say nothing of the passenger business. This is a square business proposition for Portland to decide, one in which it should not be slow in grasping if it is desirous of securing another valuable feeder. But will it do it, or shall we have to wait until the government makes improvements on Tillamook bars before these resources can be developed?
Republican Meeting.
A republican meeting was held Tuesday evening in the opera house, presided over by Mr. A. W. Severance, chairman of the county central committee, who briefly introduced the speaker, Colonel S. E. Spencer, of Portland. The colonel commenced his speech by asking the people to remember the promises of the democratic party eight and four years ago, none of which had been fulfilled, and the predictions they made about the gold standard bringing ruination to the country, as all could readily see for themselves, were not substantiated, while the promises of the republican party to give prosperity in the place of hard times had been implicitly carried out by the present administration. He gave figures to show how rapid our exports were increasing to prove, in a general sense, that the country was never more prosperous than what it is today. In taking up the trust question, he asked, "What have the democrats done to suppress the trusts?" They were doing a lot of talking. The Cleveland administration had expended a good deal of money preparing a report on the trusts, but the democrats never enacted a law to suppress the trusts. That was left for the republicans to do, and not only was a law passed to suppress them but the republican party had been instrumental in successfully prosecuting several large trusts. Colonel Spencer could not understand why the democratic party should become so suddenly adverse to expansion, considering that that party had added so much territory to the United States, other than that they were badly in need of a battle cry to take the place of free trade and free silver. As far as the Philippine islands were concerned he was in favor of annexing them, and if the natives were unfit for a good form of government we should treat them as we do the Indians, for it was a survival of the fittest, and he did not believe in hauling down the flag after some of the best blood of the country had been spilled to defend it in the Philippines. Besides, the Pacific Coast needed the islands for commerce as much as the South needed Cuba. Colonel Spencer spoke at Bay City Wednesday evening, and this (Thursday) evening speaks at Hebo.
