

RUBBER BOOTS. RUBBER COATS.

We carry by far the largest and most complete stock of Rubber Boots, Rubber Coats and Rubber Goods of every description kept in this city, but we are not over stocked, and our prices are lower than others for the same class of goods. We carry only the standard makes. No cheap brands such as are usually kept in small stores. We guarantee every garment sold or money back.

MACINTOSHES. SLICKERS.

COHN & CO., The Leading Tillamook Merchants.

OUR LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CLOTHING, BOOTS, SHOES, HATS and UNDERWEAR is unequalled.

From the factory to the customer is the way that most of our goods are bought and sold. It is because we buy in large quantities, and, therefore, can sell cheaper than others, who must buy in small quantities through the wholesale store that we are the leaders.

CAPES & JACKETS.

We have a few Capes and Jackets left, which we are selling as bargains. Call early if you want one. They are the very latest patterns.

Our Two Dollar Stiff Hat is the latest and best thing made. The Bailey Ribbed back Rubbers are the best rubbers made. We sell them. We are the leaders in every line we carry, especially Groceries, the largest stock in Tillamook.

THE POLICY WASN'T DEAD.

Once Insured, Always Insured in the Mutual Life.

"It's curious how things go in this world, mighty curious. Las' Saturday the boys was 'round passin' the hat like for Widow Otis."

"I thought Jim Otis always kerried a big insurance?"

"He did up to eighteen months ago. When he got that there cancer onto his stomach and it laid him up, he couldn't keep up his dues. He had nigh onto as much as fifteen thonsan' dollars at one time. He told me so hisself sittin' right where you be now."

"Well, that fellow that stopped here last week he allowed that in his company you couldn't lose if you tried. That if his company had ever insured Jim Otis for fifteen thonsan' dollars he had to stay insured, couldn't a-helped himself."

"I know. 'Bout ten years ago Pete Dawson paid one of them concerns sixty two dollars a year for four years; then he got the inflammatory rheumatism and swelled up like a larks-purred cow. He applied for an extension and then he forgot that one hundred and eighty dollars he'd paid in. When he kicked the bucket his wife didn't have six bits in the house, had more babies than bits, too. It just happened the agent dropped in here an' heered the boys talking the day of the funeral."

"Why," he sez, "I wrote that man years ago," he sez, "for two thonsan' dollars. Where's his policy?"

"It's here," I up and sez, "among some other old papers. I saw it just a day or two ago. It's run out years ago," I sez, "he aint paid a cent on it fer years."

"Run out, hell!" he sez. "It's in the Mutual Life, man," he sez. "When the Mutual takes a-holt," he sez, "she never lets go. Dig up the policy."

"Course I knowed the policy was dead, as dead as Pete was, and we had planted him that afternoon. But I jest wanted to see what he'd say, and I got it out. He tuk it and figured a bit, an' more of the boys gathered in an' looked on."

"Let's go over to the bank," he sez. "I locked up an' went with him, an' the rest sort o' tailed in behin'." He went right in as agy as Billy-be-Dammed.

"Mr. De Witt," he sez, "I understand you hold a mortgage against the Widow Dawson's farm?" he sez.

"We do," sez old De Witt, "on the farm an' the stock. He gave a mortgage on all the stock to secure the last installment of interest."

"How much?" sez that there agent, jest like that. "How much?" he sez.

"Eight hundred and seven dollars and fifteen cents," says old De Witt; he never forgits what's comin' to him.

"Well," sez the agent kind of easy like, "we want to pay it off," he sez.

"You do!" sez De Witt. "I allers thought he was; too derned well pleased either. He had a kind of hankerin' after that Dawson farm."

"We do," sez the agent, quite soft, an' by this time the boys was all a listenin'. "We want to give her a little surprise," he sez, an' he pulled out the policy. About this time you could 'a lass'd my eyes with a tow string I reckon. They was stickin' out like two horns, but I jis' laid low n' kep' hesh."

"You know the Mutual Life of New York?" the agent sez.

"I do," sez De Witt.

"Well, here's Peter Dawson's policy," sez the agent, holdin' it of it out.

"De Witt jis' giv' it a look. 'It's run out, expired,' he sez, and I knowed the jig was up right there. But it didn't skeer that agent a bit to get called down, not as I could see, he was that easy."

"A policy in the Mutual Life Insurance Company never runs out," he sez, and knocked the dust off it. "Here's the company's receipt," he sez, "dated seven years ago for the last of the four payments he made, and here's his extension, applied for when he first took sick I believe and duly granted. If you will read the conditions on the back of this policy you will see, I think, that we can pay off that mortgage—'n' have somethin' left over," he sez.

"Old De Witt, he kinder read a few minits, then he studied a bit. 'Of course the proofs can be made all right,' he allowed, 'but the company has sixty days,' he sez.

"Exactly," sez the agent, 'but we understand that the widow's rather sickly and very much distressed, or something like that, 'n' we'd jest like to surprise her,' he sez, "'n' we thought we boys w'd stand the discount," he sez; 'jest to finish it up,' he sez.

"Us boys hadn't never thought of no sech thing, natchelly not knowin' a dam thing about it heretofore, but that there agent jest natchelly played it on us."

"Here's my sheer," said Jim Terwilliger, and he pops a five dollar piece onto the counter. I dug up, and Shorty got in, 'n' about a minute there was a percession jest a droppin' of their wads."

"De Witt had been a stan'in' still all this time, 'n' I noticed how derned queer he was a lookin'. Then I over hear'n say to hisself: 'Widow Dawson used to be,' he sez under his breath, 'used to be Lucindy Jackson.' Then he spoke up right short and kin' of hard like."

"Hold on there you men!" he sez, "this gentleman 'n' I will arrange all that," he sez, "Later," he sez, and he shut hisself right sudden into his little room."

"I went with the agent next day 'n' he tuk the widow her notes 'n' mortgage 'n' tore 'em up, she a stan'in' there a lookin' at him 'n' all her brats a hangin' onto her. Then he give her a thonsan' dollars all in bills."

"And," said one of the listeners. "And she fainted away right then 'n' there 'n' him meandered."

A long silence followed.

"Well!" said a tall young farmer at last, "That beats — out of this here other kind of insurance."
