Surely there ought to be enough enterprise and staying qualities in the young men of this city to hold together in making a success of a band. As the summer and the 4th of July will be here, a band is almost indispensable. Cannot another effort be made to reorganize the band? There is plenty of musical talent in the city and a number of musical instruments which have been partly paid for, and this in itself is a good starter. A band concert once a week on the Main street during the summer would be a nice thing. But the question is, Who is going to take hold and make a success of it?

Captain E. R. Thompson, who died on April 4th at his place on the Nehalem beach, was born in Ireland on September 6th, 1806, and came to the United States in 1830. The early part of his life he was a sea captain. It is said that in an hunting expedition from California with three other men he came through Tillamook in 1850, but he did not locate in the county until 1862. He married in California Lucinda Sheer, who had two sons, B. S. Thompson, of this county, and the other residing now in New Orleans. It was the wish of the deceased to be buried on his place. He retained his faculties right up to the last.

Mr. George Cohn came near being suffocated early Sunday morning. He has a coal oil stove in his bed room at the Allen house, and leaving the light too high, turned in and went to sleep. Some hours after he woke up with a stifling sensation in his throat and could hardly breathe. Thinking the room had become too warm he got up and turned the light out in the stove, returning to bed without lighting a lamp. When he awoke in the morning he found he was in anything but a fairyland. The ceiling was blackened, the walls were blackened, the bed was blackened, in fact everything in the room was black, and George did not know whether the gods had turned him into a nigger or a coal miner with his bed in a black crevice of a mine, until he thought of the stove, and then it dawned upon him how the stove had manufactured chimney black and deposited it everywhere.

Mr. Henry Meldrum, of Oregon City, in sending the editor some "dough" on subscription, writes: "Have always preserved a warm corner in my heart for the good people of Tillamook, and trust they and the Headlight will live to see a thirty foot channel on the bar and see Pullman cars running into your fair city. More power to the Headlight." We can assure Mr. Meldrum there will be some talk kicking if Tillamook bar is not improved at the first opportunity, and the power of the Headlight will be manipulated for weal or for woe. As to Pullman cars, please don't mention another word to the editor about railroad unless there is something substantial at the back of it, for we are accused of being a bad man, giving Tillamook county the worse black eye it ever had, not at to live in the community, and a hundred and one charges laid to our door for printing and telling what? The unvarnished truth about the people who were building a railroad from Portland to Tillamook on wind. There's plenty of power behind the Headlight, only the editor uses his own discretion when to turn it on.

BEAVER.

Joe Bixby, a prominent cattle, cheese factory and dairyman, living near Beaver, Tillamook County, is the recipient of many jests and illusions cast by his friends, says the Sheridan Sun. One day last week an odd-looking, shabbily dressed fellow approached Mr. Bixby in rather an awkward manner and tried to sell him some mole and gopher poison. Mr. Bixby was a little skeptical concerning its merits; but instead of buying he offered the fellow 10 cents for every mole or gopher he would kill. The fellow went out in the field and in the course of two or three hours returned with a sack containing 125 moles. Some of them had been killed a week or so ago, yet Mr. Bixby paid the stranger $12.50. The molekiller sacked up his moles and went on his way rejoicing.

A Coming Issue.

In an address at Buffalo Saturday evening, ex-Governor and ex-Senator David B. Hill discussed the great monopolies or combines that are attracting so much attention, and suggested, as one means of checking their enormous opportunities and profits, that the Government "should withdraw the tariff favors from the industries represented by these institutions, whose projectors are already reveling in wealth and are astonishing the world by the munificence of their benefactions." Attempting to suggest what Jefferson would do if alive and confronted with such conditions, Mr. Hill said: "We may be sure he would not appoint as Attorney-General the man recommended by the friends and promoters of these very schemes, whose official province it would be to prosecute all violators of the Federal statutes passed to prevent the consummation of just such public wrongs."
The suggestion made by Mr. Hill, and by other Democrats, that the tariff should be withdrawn from articles controlled by these great trusts, is so manifestly reasonable and right, in the interest of the people generally, that it is being made by prominent Republicans as well, and unless it be heeded and acted upon we may reasonably expect that in this way "the tariff" will again become a principal if not the paramount issue in our next political campaigns. The people will have a tussle with these great industrial combines before long, to this extent at least, and it may then be demonstrated that the Morgans and Rockefellers are not as allpowerful in political or Governmental affairs as some of the pessimists have declared them to be.
Mr. Hill's fling at the President for appointing men like Griggs and Knox to the position of Attorney-General is not without good excuse. Probably our ablest lawyers are corporation or trust attorneys; but sufficiently capable lawyers could be found who are not completely and in a sense offensively allied with the trusts as these appointees. It is a fair and almost a necessary conclusion that in appointing them the President only executed the orders of the great trusts and monopolies. This is an affront to the people that at some time and in some way they will resent.—Evening Telegram.

SPECTACLES

My System of Fitting

the eyes is different from most of dealers, especially those who sell the frames all ready fitted with the glasses. By the aid of a large complete trial or test case I can fit any eye, making it a very easy matter to detect any slight variation of the eyes by testing each eye separately.

The Lenses
or glasses are put into frames of your own selection, after the eyes have been thoroughly tested. The same quality of lenses is put into every frame sold, the difference in price being only in the frame.

If you don't want to use a pair of spectacles come in and try my system and see whether your eyes are all right or not, then
