and threw itself, carrying the buggy into twenty feet of water. Fortunately the Nehalem ball players were near at hand, and stringing themselves into the water by holding each others hands, managed to reach the buggy. Mrs. Larson was in the worst fix, for she had become tangled in the top of the buggy, and it was quite a time before she was extricated from her perilous position, it looking at one time that she would drown before they did so. After rescuing them, the horse and buggy were pulled out, the animal being more dead than alive.

Having sent two packages of the special edition of the Headlight to the Oregon exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition, among other things Commissioner H. E. Dorsch says: "I am in receipt of two packages of the special edition of the Tillamook Headlight, and desire to thank you very much for it, as it fills the nich exactly. I do not know of anything you could have sent of more practical value to us here and you there, through just these copies—only wish you had sent more." Mr. A. J. Cohn suggested sending these copies, and as they want more, we shall send Mr. Dorsch several hundred copies.

The fine weather on the Fourth was an agreeable surprise, and caused quite a large number of citizens to participate in the celebration in this city. The ideal weather made everything look gay and the citizens were happy. Miss Nevada Grayson represented the Goddess of Liberty and Miss Esther Munson Columbia. Messrs. B. L. Eddy and T. B. Handley delivered the orations, and Miss Kate Plank read the Declaration. The feature of the day was a bull team drawing a number of carts to represent the arrival of the first cars on the Portland, Nehalem & Tillamook railroad. The band boys and all those in charge of the train were dressed as plug uglies. A speech by the president, Mr. C. E. Reynolds, from the grand stand took the cake. The ball game proved an uninteresting affair.

The next representative who goes to the state legislature from Tillamook and don't kill off a few of the persons whose duty it is to boss road work, we give fair warning that we shall go after them rough shod on their return. It's all fool ishness to have so many bosses. Either let the county court, the roadmaster, or road supervisors boss the work, for to have the county judge boss the commissioners, the commissioners boss the road master, the road master boss the road supervisors, the road supervisors boss those who work on the roads, is not a satisfactory state of affairs when these very people differ as to how road work should be done. But as this is the law, here is a favorable opportunity for some one to show their legislative ability to kill off some of this bossism in road work. Multnomah county should be interested in this, because it has a political Steele for road boss.

The Headlight gave the Quaker doctors a "roasting" because that was the medicine they desired. His Quakership first proposed to the editor that we "roast" the city council, but failing in this, he offered to pay us for "roasting" the Quaker doctors. We had no objection to that, so wrote a few "roasting" paragraphs. Under these circumstances we cannot see why the doctor should smart under the medicine we administered, for he amused the audience the other evening by reading these paragraphs, criticising them and "roasting" the editor. We have no objection to that, for change about is fair play, but here's the point: What do you think of a man who can't take the medicine he proposes for himself, but frets and squirms and bellyaches before an audience because the medicine he administered contained too much truth for his Quakership's palate? Tread on a Quaker doctor's corns and he kicks up as much clatter with his jaw bone as a dog with a tin bucket tied to its tail. By the way, he hope the Quaker doctor will live up to his word and pay us for the medicine which he called for, and not crawlfish out of the balance because it didn't suit him. The editor can stand all the "roasting" the Quaker doctors can give him, as long as they don't give us the same kind of "roasting" Old Sol has been giving the people in the East and middle states. Moral: Don't get an independent editor to write "roasting" paragraphs about yourself, for they may bristle with too much truth if you do.

city dads that "roasted" the Quakers as fakes and then inserted a paragraph advising everybody to patronize them?
We'd like to know what kind of a grudge the county clerk's horse has against the sheriff, when that animal, as our Nehalem scripe writes, "boldly struck out for China, taking the buggy and occupants along."

Mr. A. Rose, since he returned from California, has kept himself busy improving his place, and he informed us yesterday that he expects to cut hay today and that his potato and cabbage patches are doing fine. Being one of Tillamook's old timers he knows how to make the spuds grow.
We notice that quite a number of the farmers of the Willamette valley find time to spend several weeks to rusticiating in this county, while the dairymen of Tillamook find little time to spare in their teit pulling occupation. And yet the Oregonian reported that the people of this county were "spoiled."
Captain J. J. Dawson sends us a storm warning: "As the weather signs show a possibility of some heavy rain when the new moon changes on the 18th, allow me space to warn the haymakers to watch the wind from Friday. If the wind goes southerly, stop cutting and house your hay as speedily as possible."

Holt, D.D., Synodical missionary for Oregon. The presbytery will convene on Saturday evening, but owing to it coming about the time that the pastors take vacations, no doubt the attendance will be somewhat limited. The church is to be decorated with flowers for the dedication and the choir is preparing a number of anthems for the occasion.
Messrs. A. and Robert Watt returned from Flathead County, Montana, on Tuesday, where they had gone with Mr. D. W. Rhodes, of Bay City, and Mr. P. W. Francis, the oil expert who was in this county a few months since, to look over the oil prospects in that section of the country. Mr. Francis is elated with what he saw there, for the seepages are so numerous and the indications so favorable that no oil fields in the United States presents such flattering prospects or produces oil with the fineness as that found in Montana. They have all taken up considerable land and done work upon it.
