EDITORIAL NOTES.

While practically all of the leading monarchies and twenty-one out of the twenty-two republics of the world have laws for the punishment of the desecration of their flags, the United States, which has the best flag on earth and is looked to by the nations of the world as the model of free representative government, has no national law to protect its emblem from insult and degradation. Consequently the United States flag, which has led our army and navy in battle, has been consecrated by the blood of our soldiers and sailors, and should be held sacred as the emblem of the country and all that it represents, may be and actually is used as a part of advertise- ments, trade-marks and wrappers of all classes of merchandise, from dry goods, edibles and tobacco to whisky, toilet paper and door mats, as a background for political portraits and mottoes, as costumes of masqueraders, clowns and prize fighters, and, still worse, has been insulted, rotten-egged, torn down, dragged through the dust, trampled under foot and burned, and all without any recourse in law. Through the efforts of the Flag association and other patriotic citizens about half of the states have passed flag laws and the enactment of a national law is confidently expected in the near future.

The difference, says the Oregonian, between the hap hazard happy-go-lucky dairying of a former era and the methodical, systematic dairying of the present time is in appliances, that between the wooden churn with upright dasher or hack-breaking crank, by means of which sour cream was laboriously agitated until the "butter came," and the modern separator, whereby the butter fat is extracted from rich, sweet milk as soon as it is drawn from the cow. The difference in the product of the two types of dairying is that between the soft, white and yellow "streaked" butter" of the old process, with the aroma of the churn still lingering about it, and the firm, golden-tinted butter of the creamery, uniformly colored and as sweet as a nut. The former, perhaps, traded for calico in the embryo department store of the country cross-roads, awaited, usually in a cedar wasthtub, the coming of the village customer; the latter, in rolls of uniform weight (sometimes, it must be confessed, uniformly short), neatly wrapped and stamped with the name of the creamery, carefully shipped and kept in the "ice box," meets the demand of the consumer of the present day. The change is a decided one, and is not remarkable only because growth is the accepted condition and evolution has passed from theory into fact.

Some readers of newspapers are selfish, remarks the Oregonist. People who read everything published in a newspaper frequently find fault with some of the articles because they don't suit their ideas. God Almighty, in his infinite wisdom, has never created a newspaper man who could publish a newspaper, the articles of which would please everybody. An editorial might not meet the approval of a certain dozen people, yet hundreds of others approve and applaud it. The policy of a paper might not suit some, while others endorse it. A newspaper must publish articles that will suit the taste and views of all classes of people. If you see an article or an editorial that doesn't suit you, don't throw the paper down. There are probably a dozen other articles that you will commend, and your neighbor may not like them. Don't be selfish. A newspaper is not published for one class of people. It is a news medium for all. In a general newspaper articles are published for the infidel and Christian, the socialist, republican, democrat, the farmer, and the laboring man. People who are sensitive over an article they don't approve of are generally too ignorant to read newspapers. A person with strong prejudices will never be satisfied with any newspaper or the manner in which the world is managed.

Deputy Grand Master M. G. Wilkins in his report to the Oregon A.O.U.W. Reporter, had a few words of commendation for Tillamook county, which will meet the eye of ten thousand Workmen in the Oregon jurisdiction. This is what he wrote: "Tillamook county is noted for good land, fine timber, the greatest country in the state for milk, butter, cheese, honey, more fat cattle, horses and good stock than any county of Oregon. The people are happy and contented, with the finest climate—neither hot nor cold. Come to Tillamook and take a farm is the motto for the next few years, as the land is being taken very fast." Yes, Tillamook is the best county in Oregon, and when Mr. Wilkins recommends members belonging to the Ancient Order of Workmen to come to Tillamook he does so advisedly and with an assurance that they can become just as prosperous and contented as those who are already located here.

It was thought a wonderful performance a few years since when steam ships crossed the Atlantic in seven day. The telegraphic reports of last week stated that the Deutschland crossed from Cherbourg to New York in 5 day and 12 hours, so it will be seen that the prediction of crossing in 24 hours does not now appear to be as though someone was talking through his hat.

With so many opportunities to make a good living dairying in Tillamook, it is a little strange that some people have their lightning rod out and who think the county or their party owes them a living for a few years running county affairs. Invariably, this class make poor officials.

State Senator C. W. Fulton has rendered an opinion that the various rivers and streams cannot be leased constitutionally by the county court. The next order of business is to ascertain how the honorable senator voted for the two bills when they passed the state legislature.

So ex-President Cleveland has been fishing in the closed season and came within the skin of his teeth of being pulled. Come to Tillamook, Grover, for there is no danger of that here. Besides, the trout would be delighted to bite at a lot of "big bugs" like the ex-president.

It is said that the roar of a lion can be heard further than any other sound. We were not brought up in darkest Africa. But we would be willing to wager a small sum on the carrying powers of the roar of the cute little burro.

A newspaper in the middle west say a portable skimming stations, or a wagon equipped with a separator, which makes the rounds of a dairy section, is a new wrinkle. Where only a few cows are kept on each farm the system is a success.

It wasn't so very long ago, by the way, that Bryan had the country going to the dogs; but in the fullness of his heart he has muzzled the dogs and saved the country. Instead of tumbling over, the United States will now walk around that precipice.

New Zealand dairy farms are worth from $100 to $150 per acre, and such farms furnish the nearest to ideal dairy conditions of any country in the world—plenty of rain, no cold weather and luxuriant grass all the year round.

Baltimore is a thrifty town. The other day a man stepped into a hole in the sidewalk, fell over, broke his leg and tore one brick loose from the walk. Now the city will begin action against him for destroying public property.

There are a great many men who imagine themselves politicians, when, as a matter of fact, they are only political grafters. No matter where you go you find them, even in Tillamook, the jumping off place of the Northwest.

An Atlantic man married his fiancée just before dying, under the impression that it would save his life, and now his wife has a doctor bill on her hands that she might have avoided.

Virginia Democrats linked the names of Jefferson and Bryan together in a way that leads to the conclusion that the "mother of presidents" had been indulging too freely in apple jack.

Sir Thomas Lipton had better be considering the advisability of building Shamrock III, if he ever expects to win the American cup, for they say there is luck in odd numbers.

Mr. Bryan has had an oilclaim located in the new Wyoming petroleum fields. He evidently intends to fix himself to pour oil on the troubled waters of Democratic politics.

Now, Coin Harvey says it was all due to Jones' management. Wrong! It was due to the fact that Bryan was one candidate and McKinley the other.

All negroes have been ordered out of a town in Indian territory. They are not singing that old jubilee song: "Wait Till de Clouds Roll On, Brudder!"

A Wilmington millionaire has married again after a divorce of one week. But we can't all be millionaires.

A shipload of old whisky went down in the Mississippi river. There's one comfort—the barrels are watertight.

Work of the Fraternities.

An old line agent, experienced in insurance matters, has given the following testimony to the Fraternal Monitor, which it will be well for every member to paste in his hat. At least, keep it where it is ready to read: "There is good in fraternalism over and above the mere matter of protection. The regular insurance companies have strictly business relations with their policy holders. The money benefit coming to beneficiaries who are protected by fraternal orders is identical with that which comes to those which insure with the regular companies. In this respect the orders are equal to the business organizations. But their is another and even greater benefit many times coming to those having protection in fraternal orders. When the head of the family becomes sick all income ceases, and a long illness often results in much destitution and many hardships, which is in no wise alleviated by old line companies. Indeed, the fact of keeping up payments is an additional burden, increasing the distress coming to the mother and children from the sickness of the husband or father. At such the fraternal order steps in with its visiting committees, relieving the immediate necessities resulting from illness, gives assistance in the matter of watching by the bedside of the sick and relieving the anxiety of the mother by the assurance that dues will be paid and protection for dependents maintained. There is another benefit resulting from the custom of having specially designated members to look after the sick and give such personal attention to them as duty requires from one brother to another. Even the churches do not have such systematic work done in relation to caring for the sick members. Evidently fraternalism should be upheld and supported by every good man in the country."

Bogus Crop Reports.

The temporary withdrawal from business activity of the plunger who has gained on the Chicago Board of Trade the popular title of corn king may serve to show who organized the recent corn panic and for that purpose it was engineered. If the showers concerning which it was so difficult to get information for several days had held off another fortnight the corn speculators would have made a great deal of money. Of the incidental damage to the general business interests of the country it is not to be expected that they would think. A speculator with a conscience would stand very little chance of "beating the game" on the Chicago Board of Trade or the New York Stock exchange.

The method of rigging the grain market is very simple. Some basis is needed in the general weather conditions, but this need not be more than just enough to make some farmers in each locality feel pessimistic as to the harvest. Then men are sent around with instructions to telegraph discouraging crop reports from as many localities as possible, and to arrange for confirmatory telegrams to follow in quick succession. The expense of this service, while considerable, is not disproportionate to the returns. Usually the wildest exaggerations pass unchallenged, for the reason that it is rarely to the interest of any one to establish the truth, and no one stands ready to pay the costs of doing so. Among the farmers the growing season is always a period of anxiety, and they are quite ready to believe that what may at any moment happen to their crops has happened to the crops of the next township or the next county. If prices are stiffening they are in no instance likely to put themselves to great trouble to contradict the reports which account for it. These considerations affect the farmers who make reports to the Department of Agriculture, as well as those who do not. The man certain of an unsatisfactory harvest is always ready to testify that the crop is a failure; but if reasonably sure of a good harvest from his own land he has no interest in helping the bears depress prices.

For these and other reasons it is seldom difficult to put in circulation a great deal of misleading information respecting the condition of growing crops, especially if any basis for apprehension exists in dry weather, great heat, or any other well known and widely recognized cause for anxiety. This year the conditions were peculiarly favorable to the operations of the corn speculators, but they did not last quite long enough to sustain to the point of realization of profits the elaborate scheme of fiction built upon them. An interesting phenomenon in connection with artificially stimulated speculation of this character is that by some psychological juggle those who set in motion a scheme for the dissemination of misleading reports come to believe them. As the rule they lose all caution, and in the trap they have set for others they are very apt to be caught themselves.
