

Meat Inspection.

"The great mass of our citizens," said Dr. Salmon, the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, "have no conception either of the disease found among animals in the abattoirs or of the enormous amount of work which our department is doing to protect them from diseased animal products. It is only through the examination of the pathological specimens actually found by the meat inspectors that we ourselves are able to appreciate the importance of having experienced and educated men on guard to withdraw carcasses so affected from the meat supply of the country.

"No public work, however, can long be sustained or carried to the highest degree of efficiency unless the people of the country understand its objects and value and become interested in it. This being true as a general proposition, we can hardly expect the meat inspection service, interfering, as it must more or less, with some of the wealthiest and most powerful industrial organizations in the world, to be conducted with vigor and a rigid adherence to correct principles unless there is a popular appreciation of the value of the work to every consumer of meats.

"To give some idea of the frequency or infrequency of disease in our meat-producing animals, I might cite some statistics covering the two fiscal years beginning July 1, 1897, and ending June 30, 1899. They are especially valuable on account of the large number of carcasses inspected during that period.

"During the two years mentioned the number of cattle examined reached a total of 8,831,927. Of these, 19,454 entire carcasses and 23,106 additional carcasses were condemned, making a total of 48 carcasses in 10,000 condemned in whole or in part.

"The number of sheep inspected during this period reached 11,120,776, of which 8,394 carcasses, or 7 1/2 per 10,000, were wholly condemned and 650 carcasses, or 0.6 per 10,000, were condemned in part.

"The number of hogs slaughtered under inspection during the same period was 44,841,779, of which 106,555 carcasses were wholly condemned, being about 24 per 10,000 and 58,491, or 13 per 10,000 were condemned in part."

Quaint Features of Life.

Another girl has used her hatpin to advantage. A highwayman attacked her as she was walking along a road at night, near Highland Falls, N. Y., and demanded her money, but she drew her trusty hatpin and defended herself so vigorously that the man turned and ran, yelling with fright and pain.

"On Monday," says the Henderson Gold Leaf, "a couple came in to be married and secured the services of Rev. M. H. Tuttle and the use of W. T. Whitten's store. After the ceremony the bridegroom took the preacher to one side and explained that he had no money, but drawing from his pocket a little bottle, urged that he had an extra good article of whiskey and insisted that the minister take a drink. Of course, it had to be declined."

On exhibition at Buffalo is the following autograph letter by Daniel Webster dated March 19, 1847: "I have paid $120 for the freedom of Paul Jennings. He agrees to work out the same at $8 a month, to be found with board, clothes and washing, to begin when we return south. His freedom papers I give him. They are recorded in this district." The mulatto thus freed was the son of one of President Madison's slaves.

A Philadelphian who knew Dr. Rixey, Mrs. McKinley's physician, when he was a student in that city, called on him in Washington and was invited to luncheon. The Philadelphian asked to be excused because of chronic indigestion, which prevented him eating luncheon. "Nonsense," said Dr. Rixey, "I have asked you to luncheon because I want to give you a good lecture. You are suffering from restlessness, not dyspepsia. In the five minutes you have been sitting opposite me you have looked at your watch four times, fumbled with the seal on your watch chain, twirled the handle of your umbrella when you didn't stop to run your fingers through your hair and have talked incessantly without having anything particular to say. You simply waste your nervous force. Learn to keep still when you can, and not to bother yourself about trifles that do not concern you. If patients knew how to do nothing at the proper time, half the nerve doctors' occupation would be gone."

Pointed Paragraphs.

A wise man in business may be a fool in love.

Only a fool would trust a man who says the world owes him a living.
