Christmas passed off quietly in this city, the weather being a little misty and boisterous. The attractions Christmas eve were the entertainments in several of the churches, which were largely attended and afforded a lot of enjoyment to the little folk. The only other attraction was the masquerade ball on Christmas night, the opera house being packed by those who take delight in the light fantastic toe.

Mr. Caleb Curtis, in renewing his subscription from Estey, Mich., writes, "On Thanksgiving day we had ice enough for skating and it continued freezing until December 12th. The ice would hold a horse, with about two inches of snow, but on the 13th it rained all the snow off. The same night it started to snow and freeze again, and today we have about six inches of snow and the temperature at zero with a clear sky and northwest wind." It will be noticed that our correspondent failed to state that he would like to be enjoying the temperate climate of Tillamook county with its green verdure.

A complaint is made to us that some people have been giggling and whispering in church during divine service. We must say that this is an exceedingly ungentlemanly and unladylike habit to fall into and should not be tolerated. If persons cannot behave with decorum in church or at a public meeting, they and their bad manners should be told to leave. Evidently the person who makes the complaint holds the house of God a sacred place and should not be used for holding suppers, festivals and entertainments, for that tends largely to give the house of God the aspect of a social and commercial club, consequently when a person with these ideas hears giggling and whispering during divine service it appears exceedingly irreverent to them, more so than to those who are not prejudiced to holding festivals and entertainments in church. As to that, we must inform our friend, we must leave that to the discretion of each denomination, for that is a subject we would prefer not to discuss in these columns, as there is so much difference between church members.

Died, in Tillamook City, on Sunday, Mrs. Margaret J. Tilden, wife of Mr. John B. Tilden, and mother of Messrs. C. W. and A. S. Tilden, aged 62 years. The deceased lady came to this city last May with her husband on a visit to her sons. She was taken sick one week before she died. The remains were buried on Tuesday in the Oddfellows' cemetery, the religious service being held in the Methodist church, conducted by Rev. G. Sykes. The deceased was born Aug. 23, 1839, at Oswego, N.Y., her maiden name being Margaret J. Ireland, and she was married to John B. Tilden on September 15, 1859. They removed to Saginaw county, Michigan, where they remained until last May, when they came to Tillamook on a visit. Five children, three sons and two daughters, were born of this marriage, all of whom survive her. The two daughters, Mrs. G. W. D. Bolt and Mrs. H. Garrett and one son, Geo. Tilden, reside in Michigan. Two sons, C. W. and A. S. Tilden, are respected citizens of Tillamook. Mrs. Tilden was a God-fearing woman, a loving mother and highly respected. Her last words were words of hope for the future life as she passed peacefully away.

Mr. C. F. Keller lectured in the court house Friday and Saturday evenings on socialism. He ridiculed the idea that socialism was akin to anarchy, stating there was as much difference between the two as light was from darkness. Briefly defined, he compared socialism to the community of interests recently formed in railroad affairs and in the formation for trusts, which was done to protect their interests. Socialism proposed to benefit mankind by a community of interests of the products of mother earth and the manufactures, but as soon as socialists proposed anything like that they were denounced as scalliwags and called all manner of names, yet the millionaires and capitalists could go into a community of interests to benefit themselves and to grind down labor to a mere pittance, but that was considered to be perfectly legitimate and the proper thing to do. The speaker said socialism was one of the least known sciences, but it was coming to the front very fast. Mr. Keller quoted freely from the bible to prove what socialism would bring about, but scoffed to some extent at those who explained the teachings of that book.

Quite a number of our citizens visited the public school on Thursday and Friday of last week, previous to the holidays, when each room had short exercise by the pupils and addresses by the visitors. Prof. B. O. Snuffer's pupils, between 30 and 40 young people, and as bright and intelligent looking as can be found anywhere, were the last to have their exercises. This consisted of a maxim from each pupil, selected by themselves. These were recited with clearness, with the absence of the nasal twang so noticeable in the pupils of some of our public schools. The maxims had been carefully chosen, and conveyed practical ideas as to how to secure a sound education, live morally and avoid vices. If any of the visitors who visited the public school of this city last week were amongst those who have criticized the professor or any of the teachers, they must have gone home satisfied that their rash remarks, which became public gossip, were exceedingly imprudent, not that we want to criticize harshly those who have allowed their prejudices to predominate over their better judgment, or those who have been badly misinformed by the gossips and the tattlers. It was plain to every visitor last Friday that Prof. Snuffer had adopted a system which appealed to the intelligence of his pupils, and to develop this intelligence along the lines of practical education was his aim and object. That he is accomplishing this no one can doubt if they will take the trouble to investigate. The HEADLIGHT is not in the habit of lauding people, but when we see Prof. Snuffer, in his quiet style, trying to inculcate broad and liberal ideas into the minds of his pupils, endeavoring to mould true characters in them, we feel proud to think our young people have such a good instructor and our public school an excellent principal. In every community there are those who are too ready to criticize, condemn, pull down and "do up" others, and Tillamook is no exception to the rule, especially when it comes to putting something better in its place.

Body of Wheeler's Cook.

The body of J. W. Coles was found by the mail carrier on the beach about four miles south of Waldport. This was the body of the unfortunate colored cook that was drowned by the wreck of the barge Wheeler, that went ashore near Yaquina Bay life-saving station December 4, says a Waldport correspondent of the Yaquina Bay News. The body was in a bad state of preservation, having been picked partly by the sea gulls. Nothing was found on the body except two woolen shirts and one shoe. The Coroner was notified, and an inquest was held over the body. The verdict was that the deceased was the person who was drowned off the barge. The people of Waldport took charge of the body and gave it a decent burial in the cemetery on the point south of Waldport. Rev. J. W. Sperry conducted the funeral services.
