USE AMERICAN COACHES.

Large Conveyances for Traveling in South Africa Made in the United States.

The coaches used in South Africa are built in the United States—at Concord. Most of them hold 12 people inside in rows of three, six people facing and six back to the mules, says Lippincott's Magazine. By experience we learned that the two corner seats back to the mules are most agreeable. Luggage on these journeys is a consideration, as it is charged for at the rate of a shilling a pound, but each passenger may take a rug—or "blanket," as they are always called—and a small basket of food. The great object is to get as much food as possible into a small space, for when we traveled we could only be sure of two meals—one breakfast and one dinner—during the three days and nights of continuous traveling.

We made inquiries about the outside places, thinking they might be preferable; but some fellow-passengers, who were old hands at such traveling, explained that when the coach upset the outside passengers were those to suffer; those inside come off, as a rule, with a few bruises, the others getting broken arms and the like; and this outbalanced our desire for the open air. Not that one suffered from want of air, for the coach has no windows at all; glass would not stand the jolting for an hour. There is a tarpaulin that one may unroll and pull down over the windows when the rain comes in intolerably. The sun one must bear, for if the tarpaulin is down it is too insufferably hot.

SAURIAN SEIZES CHILD.

Narrow Escape of a Little One from the Jaws of a Florida Alligator.

While a number of passengers were waiting for the morning train at Pablo Beach one day recently they heard the wail of a child, seemingly in great distress. Jerry Delaney, deputy sheriff and a former Cincinnati policeman, headed a number who hastened to search for the cause of the cry. A short distance away they saw a big alligator dragging a child away, having secured a hold of its dress in its mouth. The child was shrieking in fright, says a Jacksonville correspondent of the Inter Ocean.

The posse rushed to its rescue, and the alligator redoubled its efforts toward getting into the bay near by. A big dog belonging to the child came running along and dashed at the saurian's head. The alligator whacked its tail around with great force and struck the dog, knocking the animal toward the gator's mouth, which opened with a gulp, taking in the dog. The saurian killed the dog and swallowed him with ease, dropping its hold of the child's dress in the struggle.

The posse at once killed the gator. It was 15 feet long. It is thought to have been made fiercer by hunger, as it is seldom they will attack human beings, and especially so near a habitation. The child was uninjured.

FIND A SUBSTITUTE.

Commissioners of District of Columbia to Use Soft Coal and Coke in Place of Anthracite.

A substitute for anthracite coal has been found by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the result of experiments conducted by them is of general interest in view of the probable exorbitant price for hard coal during the coming winter. After asking for proposals for the annual coal supply, and receiving only one bid, at ten dollars a ton, which was immediately withdrawn, the commissioners were forced to seek a substitute. A series of experiments were made in the steam-heating plants and furnaces in the public schools, which demonstrated that a combination of bituminous coal and coke produced as good results as had been obtained when anthracite coal was used. The furnaces are fired with a layer of coke, then a layer of soft coal and another layer of coke on top. It is a comparatively slow burning fire, and one that does not violate the smoke nuisance laws.

KATE SHELLEY TO BE NURSE.

The Iowa Heroine to Enter the State Insane Asylum Hospital at Cherokee.

Miss Kate Shelley, the heroine of many poems and writings in prose, who when a child saved a train load of people from death by creeping over a frozen bridge near Moingona, Boone county, Ia., in a raging storm and warning the engineer of the danger, will next month enter the state insane hospital at Cherokee, Ia., as a nurse. She has already been engaged by the asylum officials. Miss Shelley is quite old, but has lost none of the fascination brought about by her childish deed of heroism. The bridge over which she crept now spans the La Crosse river, a few miles from La Crosse, having been moved to that point a few years ago.

"It is better," says a penitentiary warden, "to give a discharged convict a job than a bible." And the Chicago Tribune asks: "Anything wrong with giving him both?"

In Europe's Armies.

Out of every thousand men from the ages of 21 to 60 there are in service in France 544; in Germany, 48; in Russia, 43; in Austria, 34, and in Italy, 30. In case of war these figures are increased in Germany to 139; in Austria, to 96; in France, to 171; in Italy, to 107, and in Russia, to 81.

JERSEY'S PURCHASE PRICE.

Historic Document Which Shows That the State Was Sold by Indians for Rum, Guns, Etc.

Carefully looked away in one of the fireproof safes of the New Jersey Historical society there now are two valuable documents that tell of the early colonization of the state, says the New York Times.

The first is a deed on parchment from Charles II. to his brother James, duke of York, afterward king of England, giving him a grant of all lands from the St. Lawrence river to Chesapeake bay. The only two names on the grant that Americans of to-day would recognize are Nantucket and Cape Cod, which are spelled as they are to-day. The St. Lawrence river is designated as "The Great River in Canada."

The deed is beautifully written in Gothic lettering, and the document is in excellent condition. Under each line of writing is a ruling of red, evidently done with a quill. The parchment is over two feet in length, and to the bottom is attached what was once a large seal of wax.

Gold and silver cords are fastened to the seal. In an upper left-hand corner is an engraving of Charles II. and the borders of the deed are filled with pen and ink designs, delicate and beautiful. The document is dated from Westminster in the seventeenth year of King Charles' reign. While the deed is apparently the original, for the amount of work expended on it would not be given to a copy, no signatures appear, and apparently none was ever placed on it.
