

A Few Thoughts About Girls.

TO THE EDITOR TILLAMOOK HEADLIGHT: The question is often asked, "What are you going to do with your girl?" but the equally pertinent one, "What is her father going to do with her?" is never heard. Yet it is a question of serious import. From earliest childhood, the boy is imbued with the idea that he is to be something in the world, to follow some pursuit, to carve his own fortunes, and receives a training to fit him for these purposes. The girl, however, is brought up with no such idea, for only is it not the custom to train her for any pursuit, but she is also, as a general rule, from her childhood, inoculated with conventional and false ideas regarding her sex, her position in life, etc. If her parents are well-to-do, she is given many opportunities for general cultivation, but no thorough training in any one direction by which to give occupation, stimulus, and variety to life, if, desirable, to become a means of self-support. This education, or lack of it, is the cause of so many useless lives, whose narrow, petty aims at times become contemptible. At a summer resort, a charming young lady was heard to say that "she only read to pass away her time." Even in doing so, she was better employed than many of her fair sisters, whose occupations were less innocent.

The girl is taught, in many instances, that labor, for her, is dishonorable; that her position in life is to depend, not on her own character, her moral and mental graces, accomplishments, and attributes, but on the social standing or wealth of her father, husband, or male relatives. As she has no means of gaining money to purchase all the desirable and pleasant things of life, she is dependent on what she receives from these relatives. So that her life is made pleasant or the reverse by neither merit nor demerit of her own, and she is usually the mere plaything of circumstances. In a country, with a queen at the head of the nation, a woman who owes her position to the fact that she is the descendant of kings, instead of to any special fitness of her own, this is not so much to be wondered at.

In a land like free America, a new era should dawn for women. And who that has read the noble and eloquent appeals in her behalf does not feel that, among the leaders of thought, she has friends who understand her needs, her nature, and her capabilities of intellectual development? The friends, too, all honor to them—foremost in temperance, anti-slavery and peace reforms, have given equal privileges in many ways to woman. Like the old story of the starling, which beats its breast against its cage, and cries, "I can't get out!" so many a woman finds herself so closely caged by circumstances, by old traditions, and, more than all, by her own undeveloped resources. We need not only that our colleges should throw open their privileges to women, but that a different standard should be held up to the growing girl, a standard of moral and mental excellence, presenting for emulation such noble examples as we find in France, in Madame Roland, Madame de Stael, Madame Recamier, and, better still, in our own country, Lydia M. Child, Lucretia Mott, Margaret Fuller and Margaret Haughery, of New Orleans, women who owe their fame to moral or mental exaltation. Of the latter, it might be said, "If you wish to see her monument, look around;" for the orphan asylums she established and maintained were better than marble columns. "She died rich only in reputation; but an ex-governor, two generals, an editor, a clergyman, a banker and a merchant were her pall bearers."

It is also the right of every girl to receive some training so thorough, in at least one direction, that it may be to her a source of pleasure or a means of support. If she has a taste for music and opportunity to develop it, let her not content herself with playing with taste and expression; but let her technical knowledge be so complete that she can teach it, if necessary. If drawing and painting should be her choice, then let these receive the same thorough training and care. Housekeeping and other domestic occupations should receive the same attention. With the ability to take care of herself, no girl will marry for the sake of getting "a good provider;" and there will be more marriages of congenial tastes and pursuits.

The girl, too, should be taught to respect her own individuality, "to her own self be true." She can then, when old enough, think for herself on political and religious subjects. She will not then feel as some say, that "her father and mother are good people, and the religion which has served them is good enough for her." Nor will she choose a church for social advantages. She would not attend any particular church, because the best people went there.

The girl also has a right to be taught regarding the laws which men and women are expected to obey. She should be taught to interest herself in national and humanitarian affairs, to enlarge her views and sphere of interests, so that, should the day ever come when it is expedient to give to woman what is now justly her due, the right of suffrage in all matters wherein she has equal interests at stake, she will be then fitted for it by enlarged ideas, by training and by education.
