

Greetings from Hood River.

TO THE EDITOR TILLAMOOK HEADLIGHT. HOOD RIVER, Ore., May 13th, 1903. To the land of butter and cheese, from the land of the strawberry and apple, greeting:

Thinking it might be interesting to those who make their existence by products of the dairy to know how other people live, I would say that in the valley of Hood River the strawberry and the apple reign king and queen supreme.

The berry crop of '91 was about 35,000 cases to 24lb. each. Apples were a very short crop, about 40 thousand boxes. The average sale of berries was $2.04. Apples ranged about $1.00 per box.

The berry crop of '92 was 63,000 cases, average sale $2.08 per case. The apple crop has not been determined yet, as a great many are being shipped up to date, but will undoubtedly be about 60,000 box. The berry crop of this year is of exceeding promise. The large acreage and fine weather will result a very large crop, estimated by shippers at 115,000 to 130,000 cases, or more than the whole State of California shipped. The prospect for fancy prices for early berries is not quite so good as formerly, as we are against California and Missouri crops, but the crop is practically engaged, North Dakota agreeing to take five or six cars per day.

Fields of berries, from 10 to 30 acres, are dotted all over the valley, and it will take about 3,000 pickers to handle the crop. The Simcoe and Warm Spring Indians do a large share of the berry picking, and the fields are very picturesque with their clothing, like a Jacob's coat of old, made of many colors. The town of Hood River at evening will look in two weeks like a street scene in Broadway, with miles of teams bringing in their berries, and hundreds of pickers standing around to see what's going on around town.

While one drives through the valley they are struck with the absence of chickens. Chickens won't do on berry farms. Can't stand to have a 25c. chicken pick holes in 50c. worth berries. We go to our grocers and ask:

"What's butter worth?" "75c. per role." "That all?" "Yep!" "Where do you get it?" "Tillamook." "How's cheese?" "20c. per lb." "Tillamook, too, I suppose." "Yep!" "Why don't you make it here?" "Can't afford to raise grass on land bringing $100 per acre for berries."

So you can see the berry raiser has to buy everything he uses, hay for his horses, eggs, poultry, everything except berries. Hay is worth $20 per ton right now.

And it is an undoubted fact that the berry crop of Hood River brings in more ready money, yes, ten times over, than any other farm crop in the state. Everything being equal, it is a question at the end of the year if they have near as much money as those who live on a more general farm. It truly is a "poor man's crop." Only one year for a crop, sales spot cash and all that, but no one has got rich raising berries in Hood River. Respect yours,

P. F. BRADFORD.

Just a Girl.

Many a throne has had to fall For a girl, Just a girl; Many a king has had to crawl For a girl, Just a girl; When the hero goes to war He may battle for the right, But 'tis likelier by far That he sallies forth to fight For a girl, Just a girl; When the doctor turns to say: "It's a girl, Just a girl," Papa murmurs with dismay: "What! A girl, Just a girl?" Ah, but why the sadness there? Why the bitterness displayed? Some day some strong man will swear That the great round world was made For that girl, Just that girl; Why did Adam take a bite? For a girl, Just that girl; Why was Troy swept out of sight? For a girl, Just for a girl; Oh, would heaven still be bright, And would any good man care To achieve it, if he might Never claim forever there Just a girl, Glorious girl. —Chicago Record-Herald.

Educational Notes.

[TO THE EDITOR TILLAMOOK HEADLIGHT.] In schools there should be kept a register in which shall be entered the occupations of the pupils' parents. Forewarned is forearmed, and by knowing the occupation of the child's parent, the teacher may know what conduct to expect from the child and how to treat him.

The conduct of children according to the occupation of parents is somewhat as follows:

Children of laborers and mechanics (if the female parent is not silly), excellent; children of clergymen, naughty; children of grocers (wet and dry), good; children of ex-teachers, troublesome; children of policemen, insolent; children of peddlers and book-keepers, totally depraved.

If anybody dares to dispute the correctness of this estimate, I shall publish the philosophy on which it is founded.

How much shall be paid for labor, is the question of the hour. The poorly-paid factory-girl is commiserated, the hard-working mechanic consoled, the merchant's clerk pitied, and the world is full of philanthropic individuals who are mourning in sack-cloth and ashes over the wrongs perpetrated under the name of labor. But amid all this lamentation, who is crying aloud and shedding tears over the sad fate of the common-school teacher? I suggest that some eminent man prepare a lecture on teachers' woes.

1. They never, or hardly ever, reach the limit of a possible examination. 2. They are employed with the distinct understanding that their engagement must terminate in three or four months, and may be brought summarily to a close. 3. They are often paid less than the factory-girl, and the maid-of-all-work in the kitchen. 4. They are in constant fear from meddling parents who desire continually to dictate how school work shall be done. As a result they lose their self respect, as well as that of the community in which they live. If they are individuals of spirit and talent, they abandon their temporary calling with disgust, and vow never to enter the schoolroom as teachers again.

Reforms are needed. 1. Teaching should be undertaken as a life-work. 2. Permanence in our place should be guaranteed. 3. A decent salary should be promptly paid. 4. The work of teaching should be classed equal to the honorable professions. It should be prepared for, entered upon, and continued in the same way, and with the same spirit as law, divinity, or medicine. Until this is done, it is the greatest joke of the century to talk about the profession of teaching.

"The great work for school officers is to secure the best teachers." This was the wise remark of a valued friend, and it cost him great labor to come to this wise conclusion. My friend, let school officers pay for the best work, be determined they will have only the best, and it will be very soon forthcoming. You have been trying to secure the best for the lowest sum, and it is very plain you have not succeeded. A few years ago, I inquired of a school director of this county what salary his district intended to pay. His answer was, "Just as little as possible." That director's daughter, then a pupil in one of our public schools, is now a teacher. Query: Have that gentleman's views on the salary question undergone any radical change? The time has passed when good teachers receive nothing, and board around. Churches do live under poor preaching; the piety of the membership sustains them. Schools never can live under poor teaching. They drag along, keep the doors open, go through the forms of instruction, but they are dead, and the money given to support them had better be given to feed the poor and clothe the naked. A church in Kentucky is reported as thus rejoicing over a new minister: "We have secured his services, for the ensuing year, at a salary of one hundred dollars, and are looking forward for great blessings." Those who employ cheap teachers, as well as ministers, are certain to get their money's worth, even though they fall short of their highest expectations.

There is a world wide difference between the fresh honest instructions of a true teacher and the dry and prosy dictation of a wooden one. Teachers of little memory and less sense often manage to drag through their terms and get their money, no one wiser because they have taught and no one sorry because they have gone. They asked the questions exactly as they were printed, and required the answers in the author's words. They were teaching because they wanted some money. In the Dodge's palace at Venice there are two wells. One is filled with water brought in barges from a distance, and few come for its insipid contents. The other is a refreshing, natural well, cool and delicious, and the people contend for every drop of it. Freshness, naturalness, life, will always attract. Borrowed learning is flat and insipid. An artificial teacher is like one of those images seen in stores, nicely dressed but wholly wanting in brains. A little independent honest thinking is very refreshing these times. G. A. WALKER, Nehalem, Oregon.

About Noted People.

T. P. O'Connor thinks it would be hard so imagine "anyone more unlike the American millionaire of fiction and the stage than Charles T. Yerkes," formerly of Chicago. "Of middle height, square-shouldered, very quietly dressed, gray-mustached, his complexion tanned a light brown, he looks for all the world like a half-pay colonel and one who has spent much time in the tropics. The face is contemplative rather than aggressive; the brown eyes, if they have a disconcerting trick of seeming to look clean through you, kindly and not a little sad; his whole bearing that of a rather tired man of the world."

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the sensational preacher-reformer of New York, has been taking District Attorney Jerome to task. In a recent speech Mr. Jerome said: "You are going to win if you are the stronger and to lose if you are the weaker. Don't accept any wishy-washy stuff about the brotherhood of man, or economic forces, or inherent rights. If you are stronger you win; if you are not you lose. It is the universal law." Commenting on this and like utterances of the battle axe reformer Dr. Parkhurst said: "The history of Christianity disproves Napoleon's dictum that Providence is on the side of the heaviest battalions. People who put their trust in armies and navies would not have given Christianity ten years to die out, yet the power of the whole Roman empire couldn't keep the grave of Jesus closed, and within 300 years a Christian sat on the throne of the Caesars."

One of the peculiarities of Tolstoi is that he always wears boots of his own making, and they are the admiration of the shoe-maker who taught him the trade. But the latter was certain that the count would starve did he endeavor to earn a living by boot manufacturing, as the work put into each pair was too excellent and slow to prove profitable. Some time ago Count Tolstoi tried to persuade two of his disciples, young men of education and culture, to turn shoemakers, but they declined.

The late George Ramsey, of Minnesota, was not only last of the war governors, but he was first of that historic band to make tender of a regiment to the United States. Happening to be in Washington when news was received that Fort Sumter had been fired upon, he hurried to the war office and sought Secretary Cameron. "Mr. Secretary," said he, "I have the honor to offer you 1,000 men from Minnesota." With characteristic bluntness Simon Cameron said: "Well, hurry them up, governor. I am just going over to see President Lincoln." Governor Ramsey telegraphed to St. Paul and in a few hours affairs were in motion in Minnesota.

Pope Leo XIII. a few days after his jubilee for the twenty-fifth anniversary of his papacy gave a dinner to his nephews, who had come to Rome on the occasion. There were invited Counts Camillo, Riccardo and Lodovico, with their families, together with Commander Stembini, the intimate major domo, or chamberlain, of the pope. Of course, say the Rome papers, Leo XIII. did not sit at the table, mainly on account of his health. But after the dinner the several families were received by the pope, who conversed for a long while with them in his apartments. Leo XIII. spoke especially with his nephews of his life and of his youth, with a surprising memory. Often the pope likes to have a chat with his nephews, and it is not rare when he summons them, by his major domo, to whom he says, smiling: "Tell those boys to come over," and those "boys," it must be remembered, have white hair.

Pointed Paragraphs.
