Whereas, the grief or affliction of any neighbor of Woodcraft calls forth sympathy from all Woodmen of the World; whereas, Neighbor Francis J. One of the most active free trade papers in the United States calls Joseph Chamberlain "a panic mongering demagogue." The same paper used to refer to Chamberlain as an eminent statesman of the Cobden school.
Isaac Gravelle was taken to Helena, Mont., by a posse of Northern Pacific detectives and lodged in jail on the charge of being connected with the dynamite outrages on the Northern Pacific. While a watchman was patrolling the track about 15 miles west of Helena, he ran across a man digging a hole under the rails. On being detected the man ran away and the watchman fired at him twice, but missed. On Sunday morning at 7 o'clock Captain Keown and two other took the trail of the man from the railroad track and followed it 20 miles to the mountains, finally capturing the man at his cabin. He was armed with a rifle and revolver.

Pleasant Armstrong will hang for the murder of Minnie Eusminger at North Powder, Baker County, on Christmas day, 1903. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. The decision in the lower court was the result of a trial before Judge Robert Eakin.

The suspension of the Maryland Trust Company at Baltimore, created intense excitement in financial and business circles, and many people hurried to the vicinity to verify the news. The excitement was greatly intensified two hours afterwards by the announcement that the Union Trust Company had also failed. Bankers and financiers, however, combined to allay whatever panicky feeling was made manifest and by assurances that the troubles of the company were only temporary.

GANG IS FOILED.

Bandits Attempt to Rob Bank of Newberg.

NEWBERG, Ore., Oct. 19.—A hold and fortunately unsuccessful attempt was made between 3 and 3:30 o'clock this morning to rob the vault of the Bank of Newberg. It is known that at least three men were implicated in the affair. Several charges of dynamite were exploded against the vault, but it resisted the assault. Finding all their efforts foiled, the bandits made their escape from town on horseback. While the attempted safe-cracking was in progress, a number of persons were in progress, but did not dare to give the alarm, as the robbers had guards posted about the bank.
At 3 o'clock the citizens of the town were rudely awakened by a series of muffled explosions, the vigorous ringing of the town fire bell and occasional rifle reports. Almost to a man they turned out to see what was the cause of the disturbance, fearing that their homes were in danger from the fire fiend. It was soon learned that robbers had taken possession of the bank, and the mob turned its attention in that direction. By the time the people reached the scene, however, the bandits had succeeded in getting away.

Watched Bandits at Work.

Persons in the immediate vicinity of the bank had been watching the proceed- ings since shortly after midnight, but covered by two men with rifles, they dared not give the alarm. Occupants of the bank building were compelled to remain in their quarters while the walls threatened to go down with every explosion, and they did not dare venture a call for help, as such a move might have meant instant death. Belated residents returning to their homes were warned almost in silence of the penalty of death and cowed into submission, they obeyed the orders of the bandits.
The first general alarm was given at 3:30 o'clock by the ringing of the city fire bell. Cashier J. C. Colcord was soon in the street, and entered the building at the side door, when the working plan of the safe wreckers was disclosed. They had laboriously cut an opening through the brick wall, by which they gained access to the safe. Evidences of a terrific bombardment were at hand. Great pieces of steel had been wrenched loose, and hurled against the vault door, bursting it open. But the safe, a steel chest, resisted all the attempts of the burglars, and the funds of the bank were untouched. The robbers were exploded all in the course of a half hour.

Intimidated by Guards.

While the bombardment of the chest was in progress, two men stood guard on the outside, one on the northeast corner and one on the south. These guards effectively intimidated those living in the immediate vicinity of the bank, who feared to give the alarm. Isaac Vinson, a young man who stays at the Newberg Hotel, was somewhat belated in getting in, and came along the street at the time the work was going on. One of the burglars on guard roughly halted him. "Get out of this, you are interfering with our work," and fired in his direction. Vinson "got," and notified the people at the hotel.
Professor R. W. Kirk, principal of the public school, lives across the street from the bank and took in the situation from the time the first explosion occurred. He could tell the location of the guards, but did not know how many more there were stationed about, and did not risk interference. He says that after preparing for each explosion, the burglar who had it in charge came out and carefully closed the door behind him. After the last attempt he heard one speak to another, saying: "Come on, Bob," and they disappeared around the rear of the building.

Nerve-Racking Ordeal.

The closest and most wide a wake spectators of the attempted robbery were three young people named Maxfield, two brothers and a sister, from Washington, who are students at the Pacific College, and who have rooms over the bank vault. They were awakened at the first attempt to enter the building, which they say was made a little after midnight, when the electric lights were turned off. They arose and dressed, and listened to the work going on below them for over two hours, but had no means of escape except by way of the front of the building, and that was guarded. Miss Maxfield, in speaking of the nerve-racking ordeal to which she had been made a victim, said:
"We heard the men enter the bank shortly after midnight. They worked along and we knew that they were in the act of breaking into the vault. Looking out over the street, however, we discovered the men standing guard, and as they were armed we saw it would be folly to attempt to raise an alarm. All we could do was to remain in our apartments and take chances with the fate. At 3 o'clock, I should say, there was a loud explosion, and we could plainly feel the building tremble. A little later there was another shock and still another. We thought the bandits would completely wreck the building, so persistent were they in their efforts to open the vault. They certainly were trying moments, and we felt greatly relieved when certain that the bandits had abandoned the task."
Firebell Alarms Citizens.
Arthur Austin was the first to give the general alarm. Having heard the shooting he started out and soon learned the facts.
With gun in hand he made his way to the City Hall to ring the fire bell, but found that the robbers had taken precaution here, too, by cutting away the bell rope. Austin climbed up into the tower, and clanged the bell, and shot the gun by turns until he had the town thoroughly aroused; Nothing was heard at the bank after the first bell tap. In fact, it is believed that the burglars gave up and left some 15 minutes before the bell rang.
City Marshal J. J. Woods tracked the men out north of town across the railroad, and found where their horses had been hitched a short distance beyond the edge of town. After mounting they struck out north.
The safe crackers were evidently professional, and there is no clew to their identity, and no reasonable hope of their capture. Arthur Austin saw two strangers standing by the bank after dark last night. About the same time Cashier Colcord and A. P. Oliver were sitting in the telephone office, three blocks south down the street, when a stranger passed

LOST OFF BLANCO.

Steamer South Portland Goes Down.

MARSHFIELD, Ore., Oct. 20.—The steamer South Portland, which sailed from Portland, Ore., last Sunday, loaded with grain for San Francisco, struck on Blanco Reef last evening at 5 o'clock during a heavy fog. The vessel carried a crew of 25 and 14 passengers.
Charles Huson, the first engineer, died as they were taking him off the life raft from exposure. Eighteen persons are yet missing and are probably lost.
The South Portland struck bow on going at a speed of about seven knots. As soon as she struck she began to settle astern and in a minute or two slid off the reef and began to sink.
All Hands Take to the Boats.
Captain McIntyre, seeing that there was no hope of saving the ship, ordered the boats lowered.
One of the boats that got away from the ship's side, loaded with part of the crew and some of the passengers, was capsized as she cleared the ship's side and when last seen was floating away in the fog without a living soul aboard.
The captain's boat, with about 18 aboard, succeeded in clearing, but was also capsized and only seven were able to get back to the boat.
Another Raft Out Yet.
There is another raft out yet that has not been sighted. On this raft are seven persons. It is almost certain that the loss of life will figure but 11 all told, providing those on the second raft are rescued, but the cool chilly nights and the exposure they have to endure make it almost certain that some of the weaker ones will perish before morning.
The Bandon life-saving crew went overland to Port Oxford and started in search of the last named party. They have not yet returned, but an anxious through eagerly awaits them, with hopes of good news.
The tug Columbia is in the vicinity of the wreck, having left Coos Bay at 10 A. M. as soon as the fog cleared, but no news has been heard of her yet.

Struck in a Blinding Fog.

Captain McIntyre, of the wrecked steamer, was disinclined to talk for publication on the matters pertaining to the course his boat was traveling or whether she was off her course when she ran on Blanco Reef last evening. When questioned tonight he said:
"We had been running in a blinding fog ever since we left the Columbia River and it was so thick when we struck you could not see any distance. There were 17 in my boat when we left the sinking steamer. When away from the ship's side our boat swamped and went down. I, with a seaman, got in again and hauled her out and got five others in with us. It was 4:40 o'clock when we struck, and we were in the boat until 5:30 this morning, having to make shore with one oar and a piece of mast. I will make my full and complete statement as to the cause of the accident to the inspectors."

Much interest throughout the world is being taken in the experiments in rapid electric traction at Berlin, the terrific speed of 115 miles an hour having been attained.
