The art of swinging gracefully in a hammock is acquired. It does not come naturally. It is on a par with learning to ride a bicycle or rowing a boat. It takes considerable practice, much presence of mind and skill to become proficient. Awkward positions are easily taken while reclining or sitting in hammocks and the most graceful may fall far short while in one of these most treacherous, though comfortable, adjuncts to a summer outing.
 To make a pretty picture a young woman should perch lightly on the edge of the swing and poise herself easily. The only true way to recline is to cross the feet gracefully and allow her skirt to hang freely over the edge. The most trying ordeal for the hammock girl is that of alighting from the swing. This is always an embarrassing moment, but quickness and a little dexterity will extricate the young woman from the trying position.

Royal Autographs on Cloth.

Capt. W. Russell Watson, of the New South Wales detachment of the Australian coronation corps, wiring to the London Times, says: "It may not yet have come to your knowledge that one of the gracious acts of his majesty the king before his departure to Cowes was the signing of his autograph on the handkerchief used as a flag of truce when I demanded the surrender of the Boer capital, Pretoria, June 4, 1900. Her majesty, the queen, also signed, so that this handkerchief is now perhaps one of the most historical mementoes of the war, bearing as it does the autograph of their majesties, the prince of Wales, Earl Roberts, Viscount Kitchener and the British generals who were present next morning to receive the surrender of the city."

Strikes in Germany.

There were 1,071 strikes during 1901 in Germany, involving 141,220 persons, as against 1,462 strikes of 298,819 persons in 1900. In 200 cases in 1901 the strikes were successful. In 285 cases they were partially successful, and in 571 cases they failed.

A Queer Bird.

Sidney Smith described the ornithorhynchus paradoxus as a quadruped as large as a cat, with the eyes, color and skin of a mole, and the bill and feet of a duck, an eccentric kind of bird bitten with the ambition of being a quadruped.

Perhaps no wild mammal is more familiar to country people than the woodchuck, says a writer in Country Life in America. Every hillside and meadow is dotted with the small piles of earth which mark the doorway to his home. The woodchuck prefers a hillside or a knoll in which to dig his hole, for here he can easily make the end of his den higher than the beginning, thus avoiding the danger of being drowned out. What could be more unlike in general appearance than a woodchuck and a squirrel? Yet they are cousins, both belonging to the same family of mammals. The trim body, sharp claws and agility of the squirrels make it possible for them to lead an arboreal life, jumping recklessly from branch to branch, while the flabby form and short legs of the woodchuck better adapt him for digging than for running or climbing.

The nature of the food of the woodchuck is such that he cannot lay up stores as the chipmunks do, nor is it of such a kind that it can be obtained during the winter. The case of this creature during the winter seems to be, therefore, one of "sleep long and soundly or starve." During the winter's sleep or hibernation life processes go on very slowly. Breathing is reduced, and the heart beats become so slow and feeble that they cannot be felt. They come from their winter's sleep about March 1 in New York.

USE AMERICAN COACHES.

Large Conveyances for Traveling in South Africa Made in the United States.

The coaches used in South Africa are built in the United States—at Concord. Most of them hold 12 people inside in rows of three, six people facing and six back to the mules, says Lippincott's Magazine. By experience we learned that the two corner seats back to the mules are most agreeable. Luggage on these journeys is a consideration, as it is charged for at the rate of a shilling a pound, but each passenger may take a rug—or "blanket," as they are always called—and a small basket of food. The great object is to get as much food as possible into a small space, for when we traveled we could only be sure of two meals—one breakfast and one dinner—during the three days and nights of continuous traveling.

We made inquiries about the outside places, thinking they might be preferable; but some fellow-passengers, who were old hands at such traveling, explained that when the coach upset the outside passengers were those to suffer; those inside come off, as a rule, with a few bruises, the others getting broken arms and the like; and this outbalanced our desire for the open air. Not that one suffered from want of air, for the coach has no windows at all; glass would not stand the jolting for an hour. There is a tarpaulin that one may unroll and pull down over the windows when the rain comes in intolerably. The sun one must bear, for if the tarpaulin is down it is too insufferably hot.

LOOK OUT FOR OPHTHALMIA.

New York Physicians Place the Disease on List of the Contagious Maladies.

Because of the discovery that ophthalmia, a disease of the eyes, is prevalent among a large proportion of the pupils in the public schools of New York city, the board of health has placed it on the list of contagious diseases, and physicians hereafter will be compelled to make reports of each case found in their private practice. Through investigations made in two of the public schools, where the eyes of about 2,000 children were examined, it was found that at least 18 per cent. had the disease. In one of the schools 20 per cent. of the children were afflicted, and in the other 15 per cent.

According to the physician who made the investigation, the disease may be contracted through using a handkerchief or towel that has been previously used by an afflicted person.

TOO MANY WEDDING GIFTS.

Express Agent at Greenwich, Conn., Resigns Because He Cannot Handle Them All.

So many car loads of wedding presents have come to Greenwich, Conn., by express to be delivered to the May and June brides that the local agent, Charles D. Nowrey, and his assistants, Harry Burnett and George Jerman, have thrown up their positions. There have been numerous weddings among society folks this season among which were the Lauder-Roland and Rowland-Hubbell nuptials, and the agent found that delivering the hundreds of presents along with the usual run of business was too much for him. He found it impossible to deliver the gifts and other merchandise on time, although he and his force of four men worked 15 hours a day, and more weddings were coming, so finally in disgust he threw up the position.
