Has Tillamook become a shuttlecock for 'Vm. Reid and J. E. Simmons to toss about on railroad "hot air"?

We predicted that it would not be long before Bro. Reid, of Tillamook railroad fame, was heard from again.

Those who aspire to city office have another tempting bait—that of holding the sack, as the city treasurer has resigned. Why not make the county treasurer the city treasurer?

The Steel Trust held up the bidders for the new water system, hence so few bidders, and now the citizens will have to pay "blood money" to the "steal" monopoly and bow down at the shrine of the bondsmen for thirty years.

How much of an increase will the tariff stand—we mean on Tillamook water when the new system is put in? And how much of a reduction can the water company stand and remain in business and carry on a cut rate war?

Missouri adopted Oregon's tactics in the election of a United States senator by scrapping it up to the last moment, and when pandemonium reigned supreme and feverish excitement permeated the whole atmosphere. After a desperate struggle the republicans elected Mayor W. Warner, of Kansas City.

Tillamook is building another paper railroad. Paper railroads are better than some railroads in this big land of the free and home of the brave.—Lincoln County News.

Steady, Bro., steady; you are going a little too fast. We haven't overcome the "hot air" railroad problem yet.

As soon as the water system is put in quite a number of the business men will reduce the amount of fire insurance they have been carrying, which is quite a burden to them and a heavy tax. With less fire insurance to pay and a little more expended for printer's ink to boom their businesses, the wide awake business man who advertises knows that he will get the bulk of the trade.

We have received quite a number of letters of late from former Tillamookers, most of whom express confidence in their belief that a railroad is a "sure thing" this time. We hope so, but somehow the editor can't get that idea through his cranium. In fact, if Tillamook succeeds in getting a railroad, most everybody will be agreeably surprised. But it is a good thing to keep whooping it up.

Little or nothing has been heard of the committee that County Judge Couder was to have appointed to prepare an exhibit at the Lewis and Clark Fair. It takes money to make the mare go and it will take money to exhibit and advertise the county at the fair, and failing to obtain the necessary money to help the recent sentiment along for an exhibit, it looks as though nothing will come of it.

There is but little freight being shipped from Tillamook, it consisting of a few cases of eggs on the outward trip and but a few tons on the inward trip of the steamer, which goes to show that it is a losing proposition at times to run a steamer to this county. If the proposed railroad don't succeed in picking up more business than the Sue H. Elmore is doing it won't be a very profitable investment.

The water commission did things up in a hurry. For without taking into consideration whether the interest could be met or whether the oft repeated remark that $10,000 could be saved by putting in a wood system manufactured here in Tillamook held water, it went ahead and got the contract. Consequently, quite a number of citizens, as well as a few of the commissioners, have a right to think that the commission was a little hasty, although it might have arrived at the same conclusion in the end.

Some of the members of the water commission have made the remark that the city will be taxed $50 at the least for fire protection when the new system is put in. It is all very proper to tax the city for that purpose, but it looks like sucking the entire blood from the poor little bond bound city when the commissioner bleed it for more than it is able to raise on the 2 mill levy. The city is up against it good and hard, financially, and if anyone else wants a whack at her now is the time to pitch in.

Thanks, Bro. Dellinger, for the highly seasoned bouquet you favored us with last week. We are sorry, however, if our few remarks had the effect of making him write like a crazy man under the power of his Satanic majesty. Poor fellow, we hope he won't get worse, and thus deprive the Astorian of such a bright intellect and shining light. We enjoyed the Astorian's "roast" immensely and had a good laugh when we read its idiotic ravings, but could not help pitying from the bottom of our heart a man who showed such strong symptoms of imbecility. Poor fellow! Our esteemed and respected brother must be in a bad way, that is if he is responsible for such ravings, for if that style of journalism continues there is only one thing to do, and that is to nick-name him "Crazy Dellinger!" and let it go at that.

Councilman Chase has changed front. Several times at the city council meeting he made the public statement in open council that the city did not need a marshal now that the saloons were closed and that they would let all street work by contract. Consequently Chase moved that Marshal Quick's salary be cut down to $5, which was done, whereupon the marshal refused to work for such poor pay masters and willingly surrendered his star. It is often stated, when the question of city marshal is brought up, "Why, we're getting along better without a city marshal than when he had one who drew the city's money to protect illegal businesses." Councilman Chase now conceives the idea that the city is in need of a city marshal, and he is wanting his father appointed to that position, so he button-holed the rest of the city dads to see how they felt. Much to Chase's surprise, they balked, and balked as stubborn as a mule. Knowing the indignation that was aroused amongst the business men and citizens on account of the trick to carry the recent election by the transfer of creamery stock, they appeared afraid of public criticism if they appointed Chase's father. Here the matter rests, and it is hard to tell what the city dads will do. The city had an opportunity of getting an industrious, sober man for marshal in the person of W. C. Wolfe at the last city election, but owing to the factional strife, that fact was lost sight of by those who failed to vote for him.

Astoria must be on the point of following Tillamook City's example in cutting out the gambling. It will be a good plan for Astoria to do so, for the voters may get disgusted in Clatsop County the same as they did in Tillamook and vote the saloons and their gambling joints out of business. Twelve months ago when it was predicted that Tillamook would go dry, some people answered, "Why, that is impossible; you're talking through your hat!" The county and even the town precincts went dry, and the real cause of it was because the people were thoroughly disgusted with the gambling system and the bums and dead beats that hang around gambling joints. One of the Astoria newspapers claim that civilization has not penetrated very deep in Tillamook county, but deep enough to see that Clatsop county's civilization is coming up to that of Tillamook's high standard of civilization on the gambling abuse. If Astoria wants to derive revenue from saloons it must cut out the gambling, for the local option law places such a club in the hands of the people when a fight is made on the saloons on account of their gambling joints, people of all shades of political faith and creeds will band themselves together and vote to put the saloons out of business. The experience of fighting the saloons in Tillamook on account of gambling was so successful there is no reason why the people of Clatsop and other counties should not wage just as successful a fight if they will petition for a vote next June under the local option law and then go to the very core and expose what takes place in the gambling joints and the poverty it brings to individuals and homes. Eliminate gambling from the saloons is what the local option law will accomplish and will close them up in the counties where wide open gambling is carried on.

Multnomah county has been the hot bed of strife and factional fights in the republican party for a number of years, and from all appearance an effort is being made to bury the long drawn out ruction between leaders who thought they were "It" in Portland and state politics. They are now using good political horse sense in their endeavor to oust the bosses and bring the party out of the hands of the grand duke dictators. The factional fight in the republican party was responsible for the election of Governor Chamberlain and the defeat of several staunch republicans in the last state elections, so it is plain to see that republicans are beginning to wonder where they are at if these factional fights continue. There is no excuse for republican leaders continuing the cat and dog fight, and when they place party principles in the foreground, and relegate to the background individuals who imagine they are the republican party of the state or county, then, and not before, will the factional fight cease. At a meeting in Portland of those who are striving to bring about harmony in the republican party, this is how one of the speakers sized up the situation: "The Simon faction has led us to hell, and the Mitchell faction has led us up to damnation. We've been led to hell and damnation so much that we smell to heaven. I'd like to see a Roosevelt in Portland pull us out of the mire of factionalism." These are strong words, yet to bring about a new deal and to foster a spirit of unity amongst republicans in state and county elections, the same as they did in the last presidential election, we cannot see that Colonel Lewis C. Garrigus was too pointed in his remarks. It is time that republicans quit this factionalism and fight for party principles. A great many disappointed office seekers, failing to get nominations themselves, have turned in and knifed the successful republican nominees, and herein is the cause of republicans being defeated in a number of instances. As long as that rule or ruin spirit permeates the republican party it must expect to meet with defeat here and there in Oregon. It is not a new deal that is wanted as it is a knife for those who have knifed republican candidates.

At the election last June, Tillamook county went prohibition. All the saloons were closed up and Tillamook was supposed to be a dry town. It is stated by people who have visited Tillamook, and we believe Al. Smith is authority for the statement, that the alleged prohibitionists are shipping in whiskey labelled "dry goods," and other freight, which contains whiskey. It is alleged that the prohibition editor of the Tillamook Headlight recently received a consignment of dry goods, and the package was found to contain wet goods, about 90 proof. This goes to show that as long as whiskey is manufactured, it will be used, and that prohibition does not prohibit.—Astoria Herald.

If the Astoria newspapers keep on publishing false statements about Tillamook they will have the Headlight man running a "blind pig." But it is news to us to read that we have been shipping in whiskey, for we know nothing about it whatever, and as to being a prohibitionist, we have never affiliated with that party. So that knocks the props from under the Herald's statement. If the Herald is wanting to know the facts in the case and who it was that voted for local option, we would like to inform it that it was men who frequented saloons who voted to put them out of business. And should the Herald wonder why they voted that way, let us state once again that it was on account of so many men being fleeced at the percentage games in the saloons, for they became disgusted and wiped out a system of gambling that was nothing but bare faced robbery. It was the saloon vote to some extent that helped carry local option in Tillamook, and as the saloon men themselves admit what we have stated above to be facts, the Herald ought to see at a glance that it was not prohibitionists—there are 60 in the county—who carried the election, but the citizens who wanted and succeeded in destroying the vice that is carried on in every "wide open" gambling town, and the part that the Headlight played was simple, that of reflecting public opinion on local option in Tillamook. As a result of that election many men and families are benefited and no one is being injured.
