Wants his Fine Remitted.

ASTORIA, Or., Sept. 19.—A protest was filed in the Custom house today by Captain Paul Schrader, master and managing owner of the Steamer Sue H. Elmore, asking that the $500 fine assessed against the vessel a few days ago for carrying more passengers than her certificate allows, be remitted. The protest states that on September 9, when the infraction of the law was alleged to have been committed, the steamer left Astoria at 8 o'clock in the morning with 39 adult passengers on board, although there were also a number of children, for which no fare was collected and which the petitioner says he thought were not counted in computing the number of passengers.

Continuing, the protest asserts that the steamer arrived at Garibaldi, inside Tillamook Bay, in the afternoon, and it is possible some additional people got on board there, but if so, it was without the knowledge of the officers of the vessel and no fare was collected from them. The protest also says that on reaching Tillamook a number of persons jumped on the steamer to meet their friends, and the petitioner believes the custom officers committed the error of counting some of these when computing the number of passengers.

Captain Schrader says it has always been his desire strictly to comply with the law, and in this instance it was not his desire or the desire of any officer of the vessel to violate any statute, rule or regulation of commerce or navigation. For these reasons he asks that the fine be remitted. The protest will be forwarded to the department in Washington.
