Rebate Convictions.

The government's success in bringing four officers of a great beef packing company to justice is a cause for heartiest congratulation. Last week in Chicago these four officials, fearing to stand trial, entered pleas of guilty and threw themselves upon the mercy of the court. They acknowledged having entered into a conspiracy to secure railroad rebates in violation of the federal statutes. In view of their confession Judge Humphrey announced that he would show some leniency. The penalties provided by law ranged from nominal fines, without imprisonment, to heavier fines, with imprisonment for two years or under. The judge imposed a fine of $10,000 on one defendant and fines of $5,000 each on the three others.

While mere money penalties involve no great hardship to men engaged in large business operations, and the public would greatly prefer to see jail sentences imposed on violators of the anti-trust and trade conspiracy laws, no disposition will be shown to grumble at the court's action. The main point is that confessions of guilt have been forced from defendants who up to now have been employing every legal device to hinder the government's prosecution. The Department of Justice has now developed an attack which cannot be blocked or checkmated. It has found a way to reach violators of the anti-rebate law in spite of all technical efforts to befog the facts, and it can now go ahead confidently with the cases it has so laboriously worked up. The Beef Trust can be haled to the bar and its managers be made to pay the penalty of their schemes to evade the law and exploit the public.

Country Life for the Wage Earner.

People flock to the cities to-day and stay there, not so much because they like to, as because they must. Before the inexorable conditions that dominate men in an industrial age, they are as helpless as chips carried by a great torrent, and the country man who drifts to the city is like the twig that is washed from the soil far inland and swept by the current into a great ocean. A multitude of people of small means, and not owning land, are now in the cities, not because they find the city more agreeable, but because circumstances force them there. Apparently in each case there is an immediate cause, but careful observation will show that there is one great underlying cause of all the migration from country to city. There is a great force from which no man is free, that carries away a definite percentage of the people to replenish the cities, which with each new growth acquire the power of absorbing and blighting still more lives. It is not only that the city attracts; the country repeals. This is why there has been so little response to the cry of "Back to the Land!" As long as it continues impossible for the people to get back to the land they will stay where they are; in the cities. The country produces people and thrusts them on the cities, but never takes them back. The reason is to be found in the relative opportunities offerd to the wage earner. Opportunity is the gate to the cities and lack of opportunity is the insurmountable barrier that excludes a greater number of the people from the boon of country life. However much the wage earner may yearn for the freedom and the pure air of the country, his only opportunities are in the city, and there he must stay. A limited number of people can live in the country as farmers; the rest of our population must forever depend on work in the cities or towns for a livelihood. If we are to preserve the vigor of the race, we must provide for the health and happiness of these.

It matters not how much room we have left in the country, if the man who wants to go to the country finds it impossible to get there. We can only get the wage earner back to the land by getting the factory and the office back to the land and there replacing the tenement by homes on the land. Every clerk and factory operative who so desires, should be enabled to buy a home-acre convenient to his work. Rural life, within the reach of every wage earner, would place modern industrialism on a sound social and moral foundation that it has heretofore lacked. The menacing problems of present-day congested city life will vanish before the wage earner's fireside and home garden of the future. And not until modern industrialism has been adjusted in this way to the needs of a healthy moral development of the factory people will the democracy of our forefathers have permeated the industrialism of later generations.

Life Insurance Abuses.

That life insurance, in its proper application, is one of the triumphs of modern civilization is a fact too clear to need debate. It is so broad and general in its uses and advantages that it has taken a place in the fundamental progress of society, and any perversion that may creep in is of universal concern. Its main purposes and results are so well and beneficently established, and touch the lives of so vast a number of persons, that it is safe to say that abuses, when discovered will surely be corrected by the weight of the millions who put their money together for the protection of their families. No word in connection with life insurance is heard oftner than 'mutual," and the idea that it is merely a delusive term is absurd and intolerable. Life insurance is the form of co-operation that has made the greatest advance. It affects the interests of more people than any other branch of the co-operative idea. Working it covertly for selfish ends is an offense of such magnitude that it cannot continue when the searchlight is turned upon it.

Life insurance, it is true, has become an important deportment of finance. Large sums of money flow in constantly upon those intrusted with directing its administrative affairs. As the equivalent rendered is not immediate money for investment accumulates, and ripe financial knowledge and judgment pay in this particular. Yet enormous salaries are not in order in a business of this character, nor are they obtained to the same lavish extent in kindred fields. Here was the first abuse, the entering wedge. Such profits should be handled for the benefit of policy holders. Growth of revenue ought to be a source of benefit to those who furnish the sinews of life insurance. When to salaries of the Monte Cristo order are added political sluice funds and, still worse, money spent in legislative lobbying, a situation is created that warrants public indignation, and that calls for emphatic protest and action.

A phrase much heard in the last national campaign was "predatory wealth." It will grow in significance if certain recent developments in life insurance continue. The contest of 1908 might revolve around it. The party that harped upon it is not entitled to a vote of confidence, nor can it justly ask to be trusted in sincerity. Yet the people sometimes strike down existing conditions without taking into full account the chances of getting nothing better or something worse. Every dollar of life insurance profits improperly turned into the pockets of individuals, or secretly placed to influence selfish legislation, is a species of outrageous corruption, a robbery of the many for the rapacious few. The time to apply the remedy is at the moment of detection, and no one has a right to complain if the cure is stern in its nature.

Bits from the American Farmer.

It is regrettable to hear that so many farmers have ceased to cure their own meat and are depending, just like us poor city folks, on packing house products. Is it possible that we are threatened with the calamity of seeing the country-cured ham and bacon go out of fashion and be added to the list of lost arts? Heaven forbid! Some years ago all farmers had their smoke-houses and raised and cured their own meat. In those blessed days nobody had heard of the "cured-while-you-wait" abominations of this age, but now it is hard to get the old time luxuries anywhere. We should think it a good custom to revive on a large scale, for purposes of profit alone, to say nothing of once more being able to enjoy that inimitable tidbit—the country-cured ham. The latter, properly put up, will bring double the price of the packing-house product among the well to do in all the large cities and the patent process breakfast bacon cannot compete with that smoked and cared for as in the earlier days. We have suffered enough by modern innovations without being asked to give up the most cherished dish of our childhood—the inimitable country ham, side meat, shoulder and "streaked middling."

The Trust, and others, who suffer from insatiable greed and can never get enough, should take warning from the rattlesnake, lately found near Ozark, Missouri, self-imprisoned between two rails of a fence. This snake had come upon a flock of little quail, caught one of the birds and swallowed it. The survivors ran to the other side of the fence, whereupon the snake crawled between the rails until it caught another bird, which it swallowed. The result was that the snake, owing to the bulge made by the first morsel, was unable to move forward, and because of the second protuberance was unable to get back. Thus its greed led to its death, many a man also may meet an untimely death by struggling in greed to gain too much money or honor in too short a time.

Jas. J. Van Allen, who married a rich girl and became great, is disgusted with America and contemplates taking his ballot and postoffice address abroad. John D. Rockefeller is having trouble with the republic because he will not tell the whereobouts of his father. And the rest of the multimillionairs either are mixed up in the Equitable or have stomach trouble. While us poor ducks, troubled only with debts and book agents, think America is just right so long as we can go on a $1.25 excursion every season and attend the county fair two days. We all know where our relations are and don't care who knows it and expect them in for dinner Sunday. And none of us are ever annoyed by solicitations to go on the Equitable board. And our stomachs are A No. 1 and full of roasting ears right off the cob. God pity the rich.

If we can knock out the "standpatters" this winter and get reciprocity treaties or maximum and minimum tariff agreements with all countries, our national prosperity will increase by leaps and bounds.

Half, or less, of the $60,000,000 spent annually in "improving" the roads of this country might be spent to much better advantage in sending all the highway commissioners on an educational trip to Europe, were the people know how to make and maintain public roads.

The $10,000,000 gift of John D. Rockefeller to the General Education Board, which was announced last June was paid to the Board by Mr. Rockefeller in cash. In his letter last June Mr. Rockefeller announced that his gift would be forthcoming on October 1 in cash or securities at his option.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure not known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer one Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.
