

OF INTEREST.

from American Farmer for the Farmer.

High prices of hogs prevailing all winter would seem to be constantly reiterated charge packers have a corner on the market.

have found a new use for corn. You lick your stamps now remembering it is not gum arabic that you find in contact with, but a new one discovered by the Illinois Experiment Station and extracted from the husk of corn. This should add, if added to the already supreme potency of the corn belt with glory for himself and such benefit for his millions of subjects.

Governor Koeb, of Kansas, tells a story that always strikes the right chord with the farmers. One time a merchant put up a blackboard in his store, and asked his customers to write their names on it and opposite tell what they were doing for humanity. A law-abiding citizen wrote: "I plead for all." A doctor wrote: "I prescribe for all." A preacher wrote: "I pray for all." An old farmer looked up, wrote his name, scratched his head awhile, and then wrote: "I pay for all."

In India they have a variety of cattle called "sacred," owing to the fact that in past times they were made objects of worship, like the white elephants of Siam and the pious cats of Egypt. It having gotten abroad that these so-called sacred cattle were immune from the bites of the fever breeding tick, the people of Texas are thinking of importing a lot of them for trial. It will doubtless be found out after experiment that there is nothing sacred from the inroads of the Texas tick.

It sounds too good to be true, and yet the dispatches from Washington state it for a fact that the Committee on Agriculture of the House decided not to recommend any appropriation for free seed distribution. The death of this hoary old fraud will mean a saving of at least a quarter of a million dollars annually to the Government, and it is to the everlasting credit of the farming class that the action of the committee was due to petitions from farmers' organizations in various parts of the country.

The wide awake dairymen weeds out unprofitable animals and replaces them with those that are more productive, says a correspondent of Michigan Farmer. The same practice can be profitably adopted by the general farmer. Better care and more attention given the cows already on the farm will make them more profitable, but it certainly will not pay to hire expensive help to wait on, feed and care for the annual income from which does not exceed the cost of wintering.

Australia has adopted the system of drying milk, which is said to have been very successful in London, England. The milk is dried between steam rollers and sold as powder, from which nothing but water has been extracted, and to which nothing but water requires to be added to make wholesome, clean and sterile milk. A leading medical officer is reported to have said that the adoption of dried milk at some of the asylums for consumptive patients and in general hospitals has proved a success.

What has become of our old friend Over Production, which figured so conspicuously in all the financial discussions of the early nineties? Last year the production was phenomenal in all lines, but the consumers kept pace with it, and we have heard no farmer complain that he had a surplus for lack of a buyer. Over-production seems to be one of the many over-worked economic theories, so popular in panic times with the pamphleteers and orators on "feenance," "per capita" and the "money power."

There is a move on foot to force the officers of three New York insurance companies to pay back to the policyholders $150,000 which they testified before the investigating committee of the Legislature that they had donated to the Republican National Committee. They had no authority to thus misuse trust funds and an effort will be made to show that the officers who paid out the money are individually liable. It was a rascally proceeding and the false trustees of other people's money should be made to suffer.

Henry county, Indiana, boasts of a young Miss who bids fair to grow up a regular Hetty Green in the business world, though we hope she will prove a better model in some respects than the celebrated millionairess. When seven years old a neighbor gave this child a tiny pig, which she reared with care and sold it at maturity for $7.50. Of this money she invested in a full-blood Jersey calf, and during the past seven years her original investment has netted her property worth about five hundred dollars. She now owns five head of first-class Jersey cows, which were all purchased with the money obtained from the sale of the pig, and it is pleasing to look forward to the time when this bright little girl will own and control one of the largest and best appointed dairies in the State.

The impression one gets from the course of the proposed pure food legislation in the Senate is that the chief opposition to it is inspired by the adulterators of foods, and those who print lies in the labels concerning the real character of the foods they place on the market. The pure food bill would interfere, no doubt, with their rascally business. Instead of labeling a certain article of merchandise "olive oil," for example, they would be required to label it cottonseed oil. Much of the "honey" now offered for sale would have to be called glucose. Some of the "jams" and "jellies" now spread abroad would need to be called heaven knows what. Farmers have no objection to any dealer selling oleo, but they insist that he should label it oleo and not butter. There would be a terrible commotion among druggists, so-called food manufacturers and many other people if the law should insist that they describe on the labels all the ingredients which enter into their compounds.

Governor Cummins, of Iowa, addressing a farmers' institute of his state, grew warm in describing his experiences as a witness before the Senate Railroad Rate Investigation Committee, presided over by Steve Elkins, alleged Senator from West Virginia. By Elkins' side sat the general attorney of all the railroads of the United States. They sat so close that their arms were almost entwined in loving embrace. While Elkins was probing Governor Cummins in a most exasperating way, it was observed that this sharp lawyer was prompting him and telling what questions to ask. In other words, the Chairman allowed himself to be used as a speaking tube through which a railroad hireling could insult a distinguished citizen of the United States. Says Governor Cummins: "When I saw that attorney passing up to the Chairman question after question to embarrass me, and when I observed the tender relationship existing between him and the chairman of that great committee, the hot blood of indignation ran through me until I could not preserve the proprieties of the occasion, and I said then that so long as God should give me voice I would denounce that infamy." The time is coming when all these corporation lawyers will be fired out of the United States Senate and men put in their places who will legislate for the people instead of special interests.

Let the vegetarian pause before it is too late and ponder carefully the premises, logic and conclusions of Mr. August H. Vogel, of Milwaukee. First the premise: The price of shoes is governed by the supply of hides, and the supply of hides depends upon the number of cattle slaughtered for food. Now for the logic: Hides are a by-product of the packing industry. Since people are eating less meat than formerly because they have increased consumption of vegetable food, fewer cattle are being killed, fewer hides are in the market, and, in consequence, the price of hides has advanced. The conclusion: Vegetarianism raises the price of shoes. Shall we then, in an effort to reduce our meat bills, raise our shoe bills? Shall we go about on our "uppers" simply because we wish to make it cheaper to maintain our stomachs or because we have been caught by the "fad" of vegetarianism? The vegetarian who is also a disciple of Father Kneipp doesn't need to worry over this question. But to the vegetarian who has a weakness for shoes the problem is one of considerable moment. It amounts to this: Cheap shoes for carnivora; dear shoes for the vegetarian. Juicy steak and patent leathers; cereal foods and brogans. Take your choice. You have been warned.

Rheumatism Makes Life Miserable.

A happy home is the most valuable possession that is within the reach of mankind, but you cannot enjoy its comforts if you are suffering from rheumatism. You throw aside business cares when you enter your homes and you can be relieved from those rheumatic pains also by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm. One application will give you relief and its continued use for a short time will bring about a permanent cure. For sale by Chas. I. Clough's Drug Store.

Sarah Benhardt's playing to a teat audience of 8000 persons in Dallas, Tex., will be an immense advertisement for her in Paris. The gifted Sarah continues to catch the world coming and going.

Judge Parker's suggestion that the Democrats ought to nominate a southern man for President shows that the voice of the siren will not be permitted to invade the quiet precincts of Esopus in 1908.

The plant-breeding wizard of California has been compelled to hide out to escape a crush of visitors and correspondence. Some people have fame thrust on them, and have to dodge in order to exist.

Possession of great riches may be a delightful thing, but millionaires as a rule are not happy. Mr. Rockefeller rarely smiles, and the thought of a humorous little thing like a subpoena throws him into a spasm.
