Wrong Kind of Reform.
 The Wholesale and Retail Liquor Dealers' Association is endeavoring to kill the local option law by amendments to be voted upon in June. The object is to confine it to precincts and to cut out grouping of precincts or the county as a whole. This scheme is easily seen through. By accomplishing that most any precinct could be packed with voters a few weeks before an election, and in that way the liquor dealers would win out. The county is the proper unit to go by. As the Headlight said before, the Wholesale and Retail Liquor Dealers' Association in making another mistake in fighting the local option law. It is a good law and should not be tampered with, for it puts the power in the hands of the people to put saloon keepers out of business who harbor prostitutes, gamblers, saloon bums, boys and the riffraff of the community. Let the Wholesale and Retail Liquor Dealers' Association expend its energies and its big wad of money in removing these abuses which are linked up more or less with the present day saloon, which have gone to extremes in these particulars and disgusted and antagonized the people, there would be little anti-saloon sentiment in Oregon. As long as the association keeps on fighting the local option law, it will only help to create a stronger sentiment for it. The association is barking up the wrong tree. Let it reform the saloon before it under takes to reform the people's local option law.

OUTLAW SMITH IS SHOT DEAD.
 Trained by Bloodhounds Through Brush.

NEW ERA, Or., May 1.—With courage unsurpassed, Harry Draper, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Morden, of Multnomah County; Detective Vaughn, of Portland, and Sheriff Culver, of Marion County, this morning followed the bloodhounds into the brush where Frank Smith lay concealed, and fired a bullet through the brain of the murderer of Officer Hanlon, Sheriff Shaver and Captain O. D. Henderson, without firing a shot or even drawing his revolver. Smith met his death. Crouched behind a log in a patch of brush a half mile south of New Era, he had countless opportunities to take the lives of pursuers who passed along the railroad track about 30 feet away, yet for reasons which will never be known, he lay quietly in his hiding-place, and met death like a dog.

Killing of Smith.
 Smith was killed a few minutes after 11 o'clock this forenoon at the end of a ten-days' career of crime equalled in Oregon only by the deeds of Harry Tracy and David Merrill. His record includes the robbery of the postoffice at Troutdale, April 22, his escape from the Portland City Jail April 23 by swinging hand over hand along an electric wire 40 feet from the ground, his robbery of a jewelry store and shooting policeman Hanlon at Oregon City in the early hours of April 24, the robbery of a store at Canby on the 25th, the shooting of Sheriff Shaver, of Clackamas County, and Captain O. D. Henderson, at Woodburn, on the 27th, and a successful effort at concealment for four days, ending with his appearance at Canby early on the morning of May 1, and his death at New Era a few hours later.

Trace Lost for Days.
 After the shooting of Henderson and Shaver at Woodburn, Smith was completely lost. There were reports of his being seen at many places, but the only one that seems to have been well founded was that he was seen near McKee Station last Saturday.

When blood hounds, which were brought from Spokane by Humane Officer Harry Draper, were put at work near McKee on Monday, they followed a trail a considerable distance down Pudding River, but lost the scent. It is now certain that the dogs were on the right track, and that Smith worked his way down Pudding River to the bridge just north of Aurora and from there walked to Canby, where he secured food at 6 o'clock this (Tuesday) morning. Want of food had driven him from his concealment, and he was immediately recognized. A posse started in pursuit and the fugitive was driven into the brush, where he was held until bloodhounds arrived and led the way to the exact spot where he sought a hiding place. Escape was impossible.

Dynamite Is Used.
 Three sticks of dynamite exploded near him could not drive him out. Hidden behind a huge log, he was safe from a fusillade of bullets that whistled over his head. Only an iron nerve such as that possessed by the men who boldly penetrated the dense undergrowth of brush, could accomplish his death or capture.

About 6 o'clock this morning Smith appeared in Canby and went to a bakery conducted by Mrs. L. T. Batten. Mrs. Batten had just arrived at the shop, and had closed and locked the door behind her when a man rapped for admission. The door was opened and Smith entered. He said he had only 3 cents and wanted something to eat. Mrs. Batten put four or five cookies in a paper bag for him, but when he held open the bag and asked for more she put in a dozen or fifteen. Smith then left the shop, crossed the street to the railway track and went down the track toward Portland.

Recognizes His Cap.
 Willie Stungler, a boy whose cap was stolen when the Canby postoffice was robbed, saw Smith wearing a blue cap exactly like his own, and immediately reported to Mrs. Batten. The matter was discussed by numerous residents of Canby and about 7:30 o'clock word was telephoned to New Era and to Oregon City to look out for the man. At 8:45 o'clock Sheriff Culver was telephoned at Woodburn that a man supposed to be Frank Smith had been at Canby. Culver at once decided to send men to investigate, but when he received a message from New Era about 9:30 saying that a man had been surrounded in the timber near that place, it was decided that all the officers and the bloodhounds should go down on the Eugene local, which was then due, but delayed. Accordingly the whole party set off when the train arrived about 10 o'clock.
