DAIRYING in TILLAMOOK COUNTY.

The Land will Maintain Two Cows to the Acre--Improve the Dairy Herds.

LAND WILL BE VALUABLE.

Dr. J. Withycombe Recommends Raising Alfalfa, Kale, Vetch and More Clover.

At the Farmers' Congress, during the Tillamook County Fair, Dr. Withycombe, of the Agricultural College at Corvallis, made an interesting talk, in which he made a number of practical suggestions to the dairymen of this county, which we will publish for the information of those who failed to hear him. He said:

Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen:

I assure you it is a pleasure to me to have the opportunity of saying a few words in your presence.

I will say at the outset that I am simply amazed and delighted at the splendid progress that you have made in the county since my last visit here. I believe in a greater Oregon, not only greater in point of commercial development and accumulation of wealth, but greater on account of its higher standard of citizenship, and I believe that you have made great progress in that direction, and I want to congratulate you upon many things I have seen here the last few hours I have been here.

Your stock show is good indeed, and though not of the fanciest, yet I want to assure you that you are laying the foundation here for a splendid class of stock.

I want to impress upon you at the beginning that agriculture is the oldest and noblest occupation of man. Notwithstanding the learned and noble professions, agriculture is the science of sciences, the art of arts, and when nearly every other art is slumbering or dead, this one will present boundless opportunities for reward. And you agriculturists of this county of the great state of Oregon, should be scientists. It is a science. I am not going to simply flatter you by talking about what has been done and what may be done, etc., but take this opportunity to present a few problems here of interest to you along agricultural lines.

I was glad indeed to hear Mr. Bailey's splendid tribute to the pioneer. I tell you, ladies and gentlemen, we who came in a later period can never repay that debt of gratitude to those noble men and women who have made it possible for us to enjoy the fruitation of this heritage. Why, ladies and gentlemen, we unquestionably live in the best part of the Union on earth, Oregon, and Tillamook County, in some respects, is certainly the fairest garden spot in Oregon. We have other counties that can discount you in growing grain; but you have here a phase of agriculture that can be developed, that the world cannot equal, and that is in your cheese production. I want to speak briefly along this cheese matter, and I hope I will be able to say something that will cause you to think. We have been talking of science and opportunity. That is very good, but we want science and practice and organization and co-operation. As farmers and dairymen, we want to stand together in thoroughly well organized association for our mutual progress and benefit, and there is no place in Oregon that I can perceive, where organization will accomplish more than in Tillamook County.

Take Hood River—a little valley—considered a very little valley a few years ago. A few progressive men got together and organized what they called the Fruit Growers' Union, not only to grow fruit, but to market it. Today Hood River is just as well known in London and Paris and Berlin as in Oregon. What did it? Intelligent organization, high class product. It is the same in here. If you will organize and put up splendid cheese factories and employ the best prepared men that are skilled in the science and practice of making cheese, and see that every cheese that goes out has the brand of Tillamook on it, and, ladies and gentlemen, the future of Tillamook County is established for all time, the world will want your cheese. There is no spot on the American continent that can make cheese equal to that made in Tillamook County. I am not simply making a wild statement; I know whereof I speak. Now, you should take advantage of that fact. You should see that every cheese that leaves Tillamook County goes by a certain standard, and your market is assured. In San Francisco and Portland, Seattle, Chicago, and across the Atlantic and Pacific—they will be asking for Tillamook cheese in every nook and corner of the civilized world. This matter of dairying is not a matter of mere sentiment. It is a matter of dollars and cents. I want to assure you that if I have one ambition in the world it is to do something for agriculture because I believe in the farm first, last and all the time. I believe that the farm home is the best home in the world because 97 per cent of the noble men and women of the world came from the farm, and I believe in the farm, and all I am saying I say for your interest. I see that you have made splendid progress, but there is room for greater improvement. In the first place you ought to get rid of the dual purpose animal. I am entering where it is dangerous, but I can tell you, you have here unlimited area of land, endowed by nature to produce enormous crops. The land here will maintain two cows to the acre, and your land is going to be worth from $250 to $400 per acre by and by, and it is going to take the very best cows and the very best brains you can muster to pay for the land. The result is, that you must have especially cultivated land for especially high prices. Let beef go. You can pay 3½ cents a pound for beef, but your cheese will bring from 10 to 15 cents. Get good dairy breeds. Get the cow that will produce the most butter fat and then you will have the best results with your labor. I do not mean any particular breed, but especially good dairy breeds in this high priced country.

In the next place, provide good forage plants. In coming through this beautiful valley, as I have done in western and eartern Oregon, and everything dried, and the grass almost starving for something to drink, I come here and see things green and fresh. It makes me throw my hat in the air and I feel like shouting. But among the beautiful blades of clover, and the green valleys and fields like emerald, I see a quantity of yellow weed. Now, this land, ladies and gentlemen, will not pay to grow yellow weed It is too valuable for that. I would certainly subdue that by the vigorous use of the plow. I would seed to clover or vetch, or something else of which you can grow an immense crop, and you will see what can be done. At the station at Corvallis, maintained by the Federal Government (we are trying to work out on that poor cold clay land), we have succeeded in raising the fourth crop of alfalfa. Compared to us, I can see an immense wealth here in your rich soil and with your moisture. With your clover and vetch and grasses and kale, you can have a wealth of feed. You will be surprised what this country can do. You can hardly imagine what it will do. The cow fattens the land. It leaves posterity a rich inheritance. It is the capital of the country. That is why it does me good to see cows, because it means perpetual prosperity. You can ship out your product each year without taking anything from the value of your land. It is made better and richer by haying the cows on it.

So you see that by keeping the best dairy breeds how you can save. I settled in Washington county in 1871. Everybody was growing grain. Large mills were going day and night. A few years later, the mortgages on their farms began to pile up; greater and greater they became, until many lost their farms and began to take to dairying.

The mills today are practically stopped—the home of bats and owls. In Washington County there are five banks holding nearly a million dollars of the farmers' money; and the country is more prosperous than ever before, and the cow did it, because the cow best serves the farmer, where the conditions are favorable, and you have here the best conditions possible for successful dairying. Be careful in the selection of your cows. Select them with a view to the results, and study the kinds of food that will be most conductive to producing the most butter fat. Introduce more alfalfa, more kale, more vetch, more clover, and you will see results in Tillamook County beyond your most sanguine expectations. You will be surprised at the result. Instead of shipping half a million—in two or three years you will be doubling and quadrupling your output, and with your timber and coal, Tillamook County will be one of the richest and best counties in the great state of Oregon.

One word more. I believe the time is not far distant when you will be trying something new, and that you will be growing immense quantities of kale. You can grow 50 to 60 tons per acre. It is as good in winter as in spring, and you will reap the results. When winter dairying comes into vogue, it is going to revolutionize your dairying system in a measure, and that is why I urge you to give kale some considerarion. What it has done in Holland it will do here, and you have a better field here for the business than Holland. I know that you are going to take hold of new methods, and this country is going to develop. You will see a stream of emigrants coming in here, and there will be beautiful homes all over this fertile valley, and this will be one of the greatest counties on the great continent of America.

Summer Diarrhoea in Children

During the hot weather of the summer months the first unnatural looseness of a child's bowels should have immediate attention, so as to check the disease before it becomes serious. All that is necessary is a few doses of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy followed by a dose of castor oil to cleanse the system. Rev. M. O. Stockland, Pastor of the first M. E. Church, Little Falls, Minn., writes: "We have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for several years and find it a very valuable remedy, especially for summer disorders in children." THE DEVELOPMENT OF WESTERN OREGON.

Coast County Harbors Have Been Neglected.

THREE RAILROADS COMING.

Colonel Hofer Beholds Wonderful Possibilities for Tillamook and All the Coast Counties.

Colonel E. Hofer, of Salem, president of the Willamette Development League, was a visitor to the fair, who spoke in this city at the request of the Tillamook Development League at the open air meeting on Friday afternoon. Below we give the principal points of his speech:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen:

I am here today in my official capacity as president of the Willamette Valley Development League, and it is from that standpoint that I shall talk for a few minutes about the development of western Oregon.

I am not a native born Oregonian, but have lived here for 17 years, and feel that I am one of the common people. I have attended eight different development conventions, all over Western Oregon, and we are getting up a tremendous interest in the development of this section, and inagurating a new era in the history of this state.

I am here to talk to you of the Willamette Development League. There is what they call the State Development League, of which Tom Richardson is the manager. I am at the head of the Willamette Development League. At several of the conventions of the State Development League at Portland, they would talk of nothing but Portland matters and the development of Portland, and about irrigation away off in Idaho and Washington. While western Oregon has never been a very dry country until recently, and we were never interested in irrigation very much, so we decided we would organize a development league for the western counties, and talk of our own interests and affairs, and let Portland people boost Portland affairs, with the result that we have two organizations, and the Wiliamette Valley Development League has interested itself in the development of Western Oregon outside of Portland. We have taken up the question of building steam and electric railroads and improving the harbors of the western coast. About a year ago when we went into this work we found that this State had actually been going backward in railroad construction for about eight years. We got up statistics, and found that for the eight years ending 1903, we had about 30 miles less of railroad than at the beginning of that period, and we began to dig down to try to find out the reason for this. We found out that they hadn't been building anything here in Oregon. They had been taking out millions, and in eight years had about 17 millions of surplus, and had spent that building railroads in other states, and we had been running behind. That is the truth about old Oregon, and we began to feel that it was time we wake up and asked questions, and we asked why Harriman could not build some railroads in Oregon with the money earned in Oregon, and we put that question so plain and so direct, that he woke up and promised to do things, and he is doing them. I will give him credit for that. He started in to build to Coos Bay, and started another to Ontario, and we have interested some of our other capitalists who are building electric railroads all over the Willamette Valley, with three under way from Salem to Portland; things are doing out there in the Valley, and I am glad to know that things are doing here. I see no less than three railroad projects headed for Tillamook. God only knows whether they will ever get here or not, but they ought to have been here long ago, that is the truth. There is the Lytle road headed for your town from Hillsboro; there is the Astoria & Columbia River Railway that has two corps of engineers in the field headed for Tillamook; and the Coast railroad has spent thousands of dollars trying to find a way to get into Tillamook. That is all they are asking—some way to get into this country, and I guess they will find the way, for where there's a will there's a way.

Now, I took the trouble to take my horse and buggy and came from Yaquina Bay. It took the best part of two and a half days, but we got here, and it was a wonderful trip. The country south of the Nestucca has been cut off from Tillamook. The only way to get in here was to come by Sheridan. But there is a wagon road in here now, and you can hitch up and drive straight through from Yaquina to here in about one and a half or two days. I have enjoyed coming up here—on the line of the new railroad, what is called the Coast Road, backed by the Northern Pacific—and they have a fine line. There are places for half a dozen town sites between here and Newport, and some beautiful places, and there will be a string of towns up and down this coast, and the richest people, the most cultured and the most highly educated people will come here and live on the coast from Tillamook to Yaquina Bay. It will be one string of palaces of millionaires inside of ten years in these beautiful cities overlooking the Pacific. You may not believe this, but I have seen the same thing down in California, and I have visited the best summer resorts from San Diego to British Columbia and there is no finer summer resort between Victoria, B.C., and San Diego than are reached in Oregon by the Coast road.

And to crown all the pleasure of the trip, we came from the Nestucca into the Tillamook country, and I want to say that you have a beautiful place here for a city. It is the richest and most beautiful country around here that I have ever seen in Western Oregon, and I am told there are almost no mortgages on your farms, but all have money in the bank, so I don't see but you are to be congratulated in the Tillamook country. Those 40 or 50 young ladies in Indian costume was the most beautiful sight I ever saw in my life, going through their drill. And when I go back to Salem, I will try to have those young girls of Tillamook come to our State Fair. They would draw more people than anything we could have there, and I believe all the young men in this part of the State would follow.

We have been spending a few weeks compiling, concerning the resources of Oregon, and have been trying to find out how much wealth Oregon has produced in one year. We want another transcontinental railroad in Oregon. Every few days there is something in the newspapers about another transcontinental line coming into Portland from the East, but I say to you of Western Oregon, we want one right across the State without even stopping at Portland; that is the way to develop Oregon. You wont develop western Oregon by railroads into Portland. We want some railroads right through the center of Oregon that will warm up the whole state, independent of Portland. You have got to fight your own battles; build up Tillamook, Astoria, Coos Bay; build up the whole west Coast on your own hook—work out your own salvation with fear and trembling in divers ways. You can't depend upon Portland to develop for you. You will have to do your own developing.

Statistics show that we produce in raw material every year, over a hundred million dollars in Oregon. This is not produced by woolen mills, planing mills, and sash and door factories—it is the first product of nature, turned off every year here by about half a million people. There is no state in the Union that produces as much wealth, for its population as Oregon. We produce in Oregon more than $1000 per year for every working man in the state—not the things we consume, but products sold to the world. We are becoming the richest state in the Union, and this is the richest field for railroads to come into that there is in the U.S. today, and that is why they are coming here. We have appointed a committee, and we expect to publish this information; and we expect to go to the Goulds and Senator Clark, of Montana, to the Vanderbilts and the Rock Island and Northwestern with this information, and we expect to get some of those railroad magnates to build a transcontinental line into Oregon. We live in the interior. I realize the necessity of building up western Oregon. When one man runs a store at the country cross roads, he isn't apt to be so accommodating and courteous as when another store starts up, and people get cheaper goods and more for their products. It is the same with transcontinental railroads.

Now, I want to say that I am a friend of the City of Portland, and in building it up remember this, that Portland is a big city for the States of Washington and Idaho just as much as it is for Oregon. Just remember that. If Portland were located in the center of the State, or if we had three or four big cities like Washington has, things would be different, but as I said, the Willamette Development League is interested in the opening the interior. We want to open these west coast harbors. For the past ten years there has been hardly a dollar spent on west coast harbor improvement in Oregon. All the money has been put into the Columbia river, and I don't blame them for that, but about ten years ago they stopped appropriations for the west coast, and poured them into San Pedro. There was a creek running into the ocean, and they took the money that ought to have been spent on Oregon harbors, and spent it there, and built a waterway three miles out to the sea, and there are three transcontinental railroads going into San Pedro; and that shows what has been done with one artificial harbor in California.

I was in Portland last spring, and met Tom Richardson of the State Development League. He said, "We cannot do anything for the West Coast harbors." I said, "I don't understand you" He said, "We have got to put all the money we can get into deepening the Columbia river from Lewiston, Idaho to Astoria; we have got to have a million dollars a year put into the Columbia river; we want one good harbor." I said, "You are mistaken, for every dollar put into the Columbia river we ought to have another dollar put into the West Coast harbors if you want to develop Oregon." There is the problem. The city of Portland has taxed herself liberally to deepen the Willamette river down to the Columbia, and they are proposing now to get the state to help deepen the channel of the Columbia river, and build the canal up to The Dalles, still further, to bring wheat from Idaho and Washington and Eastern Oregon; the River and Harbor Bills for the last 20 years have averaged about eighteen millions a year. If they get a million a year for the Columbia river, how are we to get a dollar for the West Coast harbors?" We have got to face this problem. Let Portland get all she can. But we must not overlook the harbors on the west coast, because every one of them is important to us, and is worth improvement. I have been to every one of these harbors, and they are naturally very good harbors. The smallest of lumber vessels, carrying from three to five hundred thousand feet of lumber, can come and go without any improvement. What would they be if having a little improvement? I say this for what it is worth, and I know that Senator Fulton and others in this State of Oregon feel as I do about it. We feel that the whole state should be developed on an equal basis. We want a square deal for all of Oregon, not simply for the City of Portland. That is my idea. We want a square deal for the whole state. We do not want everything thrown into the Columbia river. That is about the point to our organization. We have held eight conventions. We say to Portland people, "We are with you," but we also want a little something done for West Coast harbors. We are going on with this policy, and want a square deal for the whole state.

We have another convention on the 7th of September in Forest Grove, and up there we will talk about deepening the Willamette river. We want four feet of water in that river from Corvallis to Portland.

I want to say to the Development League of Tillamook, send some delegates to Forest Grove. Send a few bright men there to tell the people of Western Oregon what you want done down here. Senator Fulton will be there, and the rest of us; we will welcome you there, and help you, and we will hold a development convention at Tillamook some time next year.

"Make Hay While the Sun Shines."

There is a lesson in the work of the thrifty farmer. He knows that the bright sunshine may last but a day and he prepares for the showers which are so liable to follow. So it should be with every household. Dysentery, diarrhoea and cholera morbus may attack some member of the home without warning. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which is the best known medicine for these diseases, should always be kept at hand, as immediate treatment is necessary, and delay may prove fatal.
