F. Worthington's House Burned.
Last Sunday about noon the farm residence of Frans Worthington was destroyed by fire. This house was one of the old landmarks of this end of the county, it having been built over 29 years ago by the Smith's from whom Mr. Worthington bought his ranch. All of the Worthington family except Mr. and Mrs. Worthington were away from home when the fire started. The flames spread rapidly through the old box house, but however, with the aid of neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Worthington succeeded in saving about one half of its contents. A quantity of dynamite was stored in the house, all of which was saved in time, but a few sticks of which exploded in the heart of the building. This was the ninth time this house has been on fire and it is the 4th house Mr. Worthington has lost in this county by fire during the past ten years. There was no insurance on the house and the loss of its contents at this time of the year makes it very hard for the unfortunate people. Frank says he would build again right away if he could get the lumber, but the Krebs mill is unable to saw it at present. Mr. Worthington and family are living at present with their son, Ed Worthington—Contrib.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.

How a Large Number of Persons Spent Halloween.

A large crowd participated in the trip around the world on Wednesday evening, given by the ladies of the Presbyterian church, which was a success in every particular and was a novel evening's enjoyment. A train was made up every ten or fifteen minutes at the Presbyterian Church, composed of fifteen to twenty persons and a conductor. The first country visited was Japan, at the home of Mrs. Cooper. The visitors were welcomed at the door by three Jap maids gracefully bowing and then taken into the presence of the Jap ladies (Mrs. W. H. Cooper and Mrs. J. W. McMillan), dressed in Oriental costume of the most fashionable style, who motioned the visitors to take seat on the floor, for mum was the word. Tea was served in Japan ware, also biscuits and rice, by the Jap ladies and passed to the visitors by the Jap maids, who looked out in their dress. Germany came next, at the home of Mrs. Crenshaw, where the German ladies (Meadames I. C. Clough, Hy. Crenshaw and B. C. Lamb) and their maids were dressed with large white aprons and caps, looking the picture of cleanliness and daintiness, which is characteristic of German women in their homes. The first refreshment served was "lager," but not of the amber color. With a large dish of sour kraut and weinerwurst on the table, visitors were invited to help themselves, after which the maids passed biscuits and brick cheese. England was the next stopping place, at the home of Mrs. Fred C. Baker. The visitors were received at the door by the hostess and made welcome by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. W. F. Baker. Red was the predominant color in the decorations, with ivy, Johnny Bull, Esq.'s, bill of fare was roast beef, with bread and butter, plum pudding and English breakfast. This was served by maids dressed in fancy caps and aprons, who looked nice. Scotland was the next country visited, at the home of the Mrs. Sarchet. The Scotch ladies (Mrs. T. Sarchet and Mrs. John Groat) did the amiable in Bobby Burns' country, their dresses being of plaid, as were also the three pretty lasses who waited at table and served salads, oatmeal biscuits, etc. "Mountain Dew," of a questionable brand, was served. Scotland still clung to some of her ancient superstitions, for in a recess was a fortune teller who had adopted modern methods by examining your hands and then handing out a typewritten fortune, which the ladies were canny enough to tax the victims a dime, this being the only side show where the travelers were "touched." Ireland was the last foreign country to be visited, at the home of Mrs. W. W. Wiley, who was the hostess. Green was the color most conspicuous.

and Pat (C. N. Drew) showed you over the lakes and invited the visitors to kiss the blarney stone. The visitors entered the dining room, which was illuminated with tallow candles. Potatoes, onions and corn bread composed the diet and butter milk to quench one's thirst, which had to be taken straight. The little maids dressed in white, blew soap balls, which the visitors joined in doing. Boston, that classic and refined city, was the next stopping place, which was at the home of Mrs. Alex. McNair, who gracefully entertained the visitors, assisted by her daughter, Miss Hazel. Baked beans was one of the features, followed with sandwiches, cake, coffee and punch, which pleased and satisfied the hungry travelers, and put them in good humor to visit the White House. Mesdames Homer Mason and F. Whitehouse had charge of this, which had been tastefully decorated, and who granted admission and introduced the visitors to the president and his wife (Mr. W. H. Cooper and Mrs. W. B. Alderman), also to Rev. and Mrs. A. K. Baird, the new pastor of the Presbyterian church, and by the time that the last train arrived Todd's hall was packed. Jenkins' orchestra kindly furnishing the music.
