Should Women Be Allowed To Work?

Now, whatever the male attitude to ward work may be-and nobody ever vet met a man who did not profess to loath his profession-there certainly M. Winstrom to J. C. Gove. Tract in never was a woman who preferred work to amusement. Nor do I believe there Olivia T. Johnson and husband to was ever a woman who was physically the better for work.

It is, indeed, a well known fact that work not only tends to lessen teminine vitality, but is absolutely fatal to her appearance. In all countries where the women work and the men do nothing, the former are notoriously ugly, the latter astonishingly handsome.

Now anything which obivously tends to lessen a woman's charm can hardly be said to conduce to her having a good time. Certainly, in the days when even a lady of quality had to work far harder than the modern maid of all work, she was neither so beautiful nor so power. J ful as the average middle-class woman of to day in America. The life of the conscientious housewife of the middle ages, who was obliged to spin and to weave, to make the candels and brew the beer, was a veritable seridom out of which the Renaissance woman arose to electrify the world with a new beauty and a new charm born of emancipation.

Nothing, indeed, is more detrimental to feminine charm than bondage of any sort, and since a woman without charm of some kind might just as well have never been borne, for all the enjoyment she will ever get out of life, the on course, the really beautiful woman in every civilized country to day is more or less free. If in addition to beauty she possesses brains, she can not only defy the conventions and be a law unto her self, but she can impose her will upon man. Unfortunately, such combination of beauty and brains is rare. Every now and again such visions flash like a meteor across the sky, but the brilliance of their success only serves to intensify the blackness which heralds their arrival and follows their departure .-

Most of the congressman who have Joseph Baoust and wife to Frank Con recently visited the Panama canal say the work will be finished in eight years. It would be in the American fashon to C. cut down even this estimate.

In the absence of a wicked partner, Mr. Harriman blames a stenographer, for precipitating the controversy with the president. A stenographer, however, can hardly be expected to keep a secret.

Cured of Rheumatism.

Mr. Wm. Henry, of Chattanooga, Tenn., bad rheumatism in his left arm. The strength seemed to have gone out of the muscles so that it was useless for work," he says.
