HOISTING DEVICES.

Machinery That Was Used In Building the Pyramids.

Holsting machines were used in both Assyria and Egypt 6,000 or more years ago. In order to hoist the great stones of the pyramids some form of derrick was employed. Probably the first construction was that which is now known to mechanics as the shear legs. This is made of two great timbers tied together in the form of a capital A, the two ends resting on the attached at the top.

With one of these the pryamid builders could have raised large stones step by step, which was doubtless their great A frame leaning over an incline of perhaps fifty degrees with a block of stone tied on. Then a great crowd of men get hold of the rope on the opposite side, perhaps assisted by some draft oxen, and all strain and pull until the A frame stands erect and the stone is swung up into the air, where it can be pushed into the desired place.

Such a contrivance could be used to lift stones six or eight feet, which was sufficient for the construction of the first pyramid. Doubtless better holsting devices were constructed as more pyramids were built.-Circle Magazine

The Dangerous Age.

If a man is going to commit a crime during his lifetime the chances are that he will do it at the age of twenty nine. It is a curious fact that statis tics have shown that man is more dangerous at this period of his life than at any other. The majority of criminals in the state of New York have for some time been of this age. The general supposition is that men have attained the lighest development of their nine, and they are supposed to be able distinguish between right and wrong and to realize the consequences liable to follow the indulgence of either. Next to the age of twenty-nine the greatest number of criminals have been twenty-one, twenty-seven or forty-five years of age. The intervening years, in which men do not commit as many crimes, have not been explained by expert criminologists who have made investigations proving the above statements to be true and who are still working on a solution of the problem New York Herald.

A sea captain tells of his sailing in southern seas where flying fish abound. They would sometimes in their flight in the night come aboard the ship and drop on the deck. The crew tried to imitate it in various ways, but could not deceive the cats
