 Water continues to flow from the well which is being bored for oil at Long Prairie. When the water was first struck it was hot, being about 120 degrees, but since then it has been getting somewhat cooler, being mixed with cold water from another source. To give some idea of the amount of water flowing from the well, by placing a board over the top of the well and a man standing on it does not stop the flow.
 Two surveying parties, belonging to Pacific Railway & Navigation Company, are on the Wilson river, surveying for a route so as to connect with Buxton, and it is reported that a much better grade has been found than was anticipated, with only one foot raise in a mile up to Smith's, and that the grade on the other side of the mountain will be easy, as the railroad will skirt the mountain into Buxton.
 Prof. Rutherford made a proposition at the school meeting on Monday to build a gymnasium for the pupils, under these conditions: He would guarantee half of the expense if the district would give the other half to a building to cost $500. As it was thought that a building suitable for a gymnasium could not be erected for that sum, and on account of the present indebtedness, Prof. Rutherford's proposition did not meet with any enthusiastic supporters.

Lumber Schooner in a Bad Fix.

It was the schooner San Buena Ventura which was outside of the bar with signals of distress flying last week, and which Captain Schrader hurried away from here to go to her assistance, only to find that the schooner was not in distress, but that the captain had raised that signal for a tow. She was towed in by the Della, and Captain A. Krebs, who was in command of the lumber schooner, reported that he had been out 35 days from San Francisco, that most of his sails, which were rotten, had blown away, and that he was short of provisions and the crew had been on half rations. He also reported that he had been towed to the bell buoy the previous Tuesday by a steamer, where he anchored and remained waiting for the tow boat. After being in the bay, the strong northwest wind Tuesday caused her to loose one of her anchors and she was driven on the mud flats off Bay City, but has since succeeded in getting off.
 Off Tillamook bar Captain Jensen, of the steamer Geo. W. Elder, sighted the schooner San Buena Ventura flying signals of distress on Thursday, and immediately changed his course and went alongside. On asking the skipper of the schooner what assistance he could be to him, that worthy replied none whatever. He had his flag at half-mast and other signals of distress flying, he said, in order to attract the attention of a pilot. Disgusted at the loss of time, Captain Jensen resumed the voyage to Portland. He lost about two hours by his effort to extend a helping hand to tars whom he was led to believe were in dire need of assistance. The incident has caused considerable talk among mariners. The law against the flying of distress signals, unless the ship really needs assistance or some of her crew has been injured, is very stringent. Captain Jensen says he thought the ship looked all right before he got up to her, and he naturally inferred that some dire disaster had befallen the officers or sailors. The skipper of the schooner, declares Capt. Jensen, seemed to think it a great joke that the Elder went out of her way to inquire if he needed help.—Oregonian.
